If bonds were to be sold abroad by our government a break ... rapidly must follow. The situation ... all things considered has been one of the most extraordinary in financial history.

THE BANK'S DECISION.

New York, April 22.—Naturally enough in view of the continued heavy exports of gold to Europe and the uncertainty as to the treasury policy Wall Street to-day concerned itself almost entirely with the various rumors in regard to the attitude of the New York banks toward the government. The sum of $100,000 gold was paid into the sub-treasury in New York to-day by the Seamen's Exchange bank. The withdrawals were $1,100,000. The most important event of the day was an hour's conference between the bank presidents and Assistant-Treasurer Conrad N. Jordan, at the Clearing house this afternoon. After it was ... was learned that Henry W. Cannon, president of the Chase National bank, had a conference with Mr. Jordan ... night and had gone to Washington as an emissary from the bankers here to President Cleveland. This morning Assistant Treasurer Jordan issued an invitation to the leading bank presidents to meet him at the Clearing house at 2 o'clock to-day. At the meeting the financial situation was thoroughly discussed and it was decided that the parity of gold and silver must be maintained and that the government must meet its obligations. It was practically decided among the bankers that they would advance ... to the Treasurer without an ... and even then not a large amount without a bond issue.

The Mining Exhibit.

Chicago, April 22.—Among the big ore crushers and reducers going up in the mining building a work of art was set in place this morning. Hiram L. Johnson, a sculptor of Pueblo is the artist and he named the work "The Silver Queen." The Queen is enthroned in the midst of a fine mineral display from Aspen and represents the mining interests of the State she hails from.

The figure is ten feet high and sits in an idealized throne, something of a cross between a Roman chariot and a Roman galley. The front of the affair is modeled after the prow of a galley, the figurehead being the head and shoulders of a deer. The "queen" holds a little scepter in her hand. The figure is worked in copper. The face and arms and such of the bust as is exposed is silver plated. The drapery hanging in classic folds is incrusted with cute lead and various colored crystals found in Colorado.

At 9 o'clock this morning the last nail was driven and the last model was placed in the United States geological display. This exhibit is a remarkable one of the natural science which treats of the structural and mineral construction of the earth's crust, and was constructed only with great labor. The first one that greets the eyes as one enters the door is a highly colored and finely delineated raised map of the Elk mountains in Central Colorado with a scheme of the colors attached showing the cretaceous, jurassic, carboniferous basalt and trachyte strata. Adjacent to this is a large section showing the strata around and in Mount Taylor, N. M. with the carboniferous, cretaceous, quarternary ores and volcanic layers plainly depicted.

Across the aisle is a line of geological surveys of northeastern Iowa, Crater Lake, Ore., Mount Shasta, Washington and vicinity and the drainage basin of the Arkansas river in Colorado showing the relations of the catchment basins to the reservoir sites and irrigable lands with a color legend attached, showing location of snow, timber and pasture lands, reservoirs irrigated and irrigable lands.

Following this is a magnificent quarter circle colored survey of the Grand Canon of Colorado while at the rear of it repose four small ... strata charts of Baltimore ... Leadville ... the Yosemite valley and the high plateaus of Utah.

SANTA FE MIDLAND CHANGES

Mr. Collbran in Charge of the Western Division With Headquarters in Denver — Midland Offices Removed — ... Railroad News.

[illegible]

... track of the Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix ... road has reached Prescott, Ariz. Regular service commences next Monday from Ash Fork where the new road connects with the Santa Fe system. Work is being pushed toward Phoenix as rapidly as possible and the company expects to have the road completed by January 1st.

President Reinhart of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe denies that his road's withdrawal from the Western Passenger Association means that it will cut rates. It will stick to tariff rates as long as its competitors do.

The Atchison will not wait until May 20 to assume its role as regulator of the western passenger situation. On that day it will be free from association rules but in spite of its ... membership it has given warning that it will begin meeting all forms of manipulation on May 1. Its first notice is given in regard to the 400 tickets of the Denver and Rio Grande ... said to be in the hands of Denver scalpers. The Atchison describes the block of tickets as reading over the Burlington and Missouri to Kansas City, with the Pueblo-Denver coupon cut off. They are being sold by Denver scalpers at a rate ... the tariff ... the rate of $6 a ticket. ...

... Hardly a line ... have not sufficient ... drawing power to fill the trains. All Western lines are well supplied with equipment, and none of them care to have it standing idle when it can ... Nearly every Chicago ... received reports from all its agents as to when the bulk of the visitors will come to the Fair. These reports show that while almost everyone is coming, the real rush will not begin until July. This leaves over two months when it is supposed half the equipment will be idle ... That they will be made, if reports are correct, there is no question.

MIDLAND AND SANTA FE

President Reinhart Issues an Order ... Uniting the Two Roads.

The following telegram was received to-night:

Chicago, April 22.—Following out his policy of consolidation President Reinhart to-day issued a general order that on and after May 1 the Colorado Midland would be operated by the general offices of the Santa Fe and as part of the ... division including all the ... west of Dodge City. General Manager Collbran will be retained, with the title of General Agent. His headquarters will be in Denver.

A change in the Midland has been expected for several weeks ... and the above dispatch confirms various rumors which have been floating about. It is understood that Mr. Collbran's work in the future will be more largely with the traffic department of the road in which branch he is thoroughly equipped. It is not known as yet who the operating manager of the western division will be. Mr. Collbran's departure from this city to Denver will be a matter of sincere regret.

The statement made in The Gazette a few days ago concerning the removal of the auditor's and ... office of the Midland to Topeka is confirmed by the official ... It means the loss of fifteen or twenty families from the city, which is of no small matter. The circular ... as follows:

Office of the ... Secretary and Treasurer, ... Topeka, Kan., May 1, 1893. On and after this date the office of the secretary and treasurer of the above company will be in Topeka, Kan.

On May 1 ... will commence remitting to ... Colorado Midland Railway company, Topeka, Kan.

(The name of the company ... should be stated on all envelopes, so that ... may be kept distinct from A. T. & S. F. ...)

... drafts ... the Treasurer at Colorado Springs will be paid at First National Bank, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Drafts by other railroad companies in settlement of ticket, baggage, joint freight ... on and after May 1st be drawn ... payable to the Treasurer ...

Drafts on other railroad companies will after May 1st be drawn by J. E. H. ... Auditor, Topeka.

Contracts, leases, agreements, deeds and other papers ... estate and rights of way will ... be filed with the Secretary who will furnish ... interested and ...

All correspondence with the Secretary and Treasurer's department ... be addressed to that office.

All business ... be treated entirely ... from that of the A. T. & S. F. Co.

Approved: ... F. Wilson, ... J. W. Reinhart, ... Sec. and Treas., President.

Transmississippi Delegate.

Denver, April 22.—This evening at ... o'clock ... special with the Colorado delegation to the transmississippi congress ... Ogden on Tuesday next left the Union depot. About 100 persons were aboard the train, sixty-five of them being delegates.

The party ... the Governor and his staff, the latter in full uniform, his private secretary, Treasurer Nance and other state officers ... Congressman ... delegates appointed by the Mayor, including John D. McGilvray and others as well as the delegates representing commercial bodies. Governor Hogg of Texas with the Texas delegation, Governor ... of New Mexico with his delegation and those from Louisiana and Arizona will join the Colorado contingent at Salida where representatives from Montrose, Ouray and other points on the western slope will also join the pilgrimage.

A Failure in Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia, April 22.—The failure of the Pennsylvania Steel company has depressed the iron and steel trade and it is the belief in financial circles that the embarrassment of the large concern is but the forerunner of lesser failures in the same line. The stock of the Pennsylvania Steel company, which was yesterday offered at 100 with no bids, was to-day offered at 60. None, however was sold. At the offices of the company in this city, to-day, nothing could be learned beyond the fact that a statement of the assets, liabilities, etc., is being prepared and will be ready for distribution early next week. Who the heaviest creditors are, is as yet unknown, but it is said that New York firms are heavily involved.

A ... Secretary James H. Swank, Secretary of the American Iron and Steel Association, while admitting that the present condition of the iron trade is a bad one, ... to-day ... there is no doubt that the Pennsylvania company's embarrassment will only be temporary.

TWO CANDIDATES

The time for filling declarations for member of the Board of Education is past, and only two candidates are in the field Mr J A Leach and Mrs F B Gittings. Both candidates have certain qualifications Mrs Gittings has been a teacher and probably therefore knows something about how teaching should be done she is an active worker in the W C T U, and would therefore be zealous in seeing that the pupils of the schools were thoroughly drilled in total abstinence principles She is a woman suffragist but perhaps that will have nothing to do with her school work if she should be elected What her other qualifications may be we do not know

Mr Leach is known to most citizens as a careful conservative business man He has been a member of the Board of Aldermen and is well acquainted with city affairs and well qualified to take his part in carrying out any matters of business the Board of Education may have in hand He is level headed and sensible and so far as we know has no fads"

In this contest THE GAZETTE has no hesitation in supporting Mr Leach not because his name was first suggested by us a month ago, nor mainly because he lives on the West Side although, since that part of the city has never been represented on the Board his candidacy seems to be an additional argument in his favor, but principally because the situation requires rather a man who understands business than a woman who understands teaching The principal business of the Board during the next few years will be, or at any rate ought to be, the providing of more room for our rapidly increasing school population In the supervision of building contracts, in the provision of ways and means it is no slight to the other sex to assert that a man is likely to be more useful than a woman

Further what we may call the academic ... is already well represented on the Board by two able and accomplished ... and we do not need any more of that kind at present. It is the business ... of the Board that most ... gathering

Still further, it by no means follows that an ex ... will necessarily make a good school director The presumption is often probably in a majority of cases the other way We have a Super intendent, we have principals, we have teachers who are presumably fully capable of taking care of the technical educational interests committed to their care. We do not want more superintendents and principals on the school board

The women of this city can and doubtless will vote at the coming election The supporters of Mrs. Gittings will ask for their votes because she is a woman We hope that before they vote they will look into the matter with some care, will examine into Mrs. Gittings's other qualifications aside from her sex, and will make up their minds without prejudice to vote for the candidate best fitted to do the work that must devolve upon the Board of Education during the next few years. If they do this and we trust the women who read THE GAZETTE are fairminded enough to look at the question with an eye single to the city's interests we believe that a majority of them, as well as of the men, will cast their ballots for Mr Leach

GOVERNOR WAITE'S VETOES

The law makes little restriction upon the veto power, and for a reason which is easy to see. The veto is itself a limitation upon the power of the legislature. It is in the nature of a proceeding in equity for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the people against mistakes of the law and being in its nature extra legal, cannot be bound by the law Each veto must rest upon the individual circumstances of a peculiar case, and its wisdom, its advisability and its equity can rest nowhere but with the person by whom it is exercised

And yet the veto power unlimited by the law, is limited by common practice and by common sense No President for instance would be justified in vetoing a bill simply as a matter of partisan policy or sectional feeling A Republican governor could not make as an excuse for a veto the statement that the Assembly was Populist nor ought a President from New York veto a bill for a public building in Colorado because he was opposed to the use of public money outside of his own State

A more general limitation is that which directs the vetoing official to give some good reason for his action It is fairly presumed that the aggregate wisdom of the fifty or a hundred men who compose a legislative house is greater than that of the single individual who occupies the governor's chair And this presumption is considerably increased when all proposed legislation is sifted through two houses of varying constituents and perhaps controlled by opposing political parties That such assemblies may make mistakes and that they may overlook essential facts is wholly natural, and it is precisely for such contingencies that the veto power has been established In such a case for instance as the vetoes of the bills passed by the late Assembly after its time limit according to the constitution had expired, the veto was clearly justifiable But it may be taken as a general principle that the vetoing official is bound to overcome the weight of evidence against him, and to show clearly how and why the ... law will affect the people ... The mere statement of personal ... is wholly ...

... Governor Waite's ... he acts in violation of this principle. Illustrations are easy. On one day recently he vetoed a bill (H B 4) limiting the time of suits under certain conditions and gave as a reason therefor that, "the proposed bill if it became a law, would only give another advantage to the creditor class already too much favored by the laws of this State. Of House Bill No 302 he says "I do not think it will enlarge the purposes of the present statute In vetoing House Bill No 3 he said "My objection to H B No 3 is that the proposed amendment would give increased advantages to trustees and mortgagees and those already allowed to them by the laws of Colorado are all that upon its legislation And finally on the same day in vetoing Senate Bill No ... he took occasion to remark "My objection to this bill is that its provisions are calculated to cripple the Executive department of the State government Indeed should this bill become a law it might in an unimportant contingency be necessary to call a special session of the Legislature of the State a matter that could not be considered otherwise than a public calamity Further illustrations may be found in almost any one of the Governor's vetoes

Now it must be apparent to all fair minded persons of whatever party that these expressions are not only wholly inadequate as justifications of the exercise of the veto power but that they are especially the last two wilful and entirely unnecessary insults to the Ninth General Assembly ... legislatures Much may be reasonably excused to inexperience but the Governor ought not to set himself above the laws of the State as well as above its legislature

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Secretary Carlisle has spoken at last but he has not said anything His pronunciamento is a singularly weak document to come from a man generally considered strong He tells no facts not already known he announces no definite policy he settles nothing All that he does is to deny the rumor that he proposed to do something He will not issue bonds he will not redeem coin certificates in silver alone in fact he will do nothing but wait for something to turn up

Yesterday marked a crisis in the money market The dead line" of $100,000,000 of gold reserve was overstepped and no convulsion followed In fact the market grew rather easier and people seemed to breathe freer after the Rubicon had been passed without anybody's feeling much the worse for it. A certain magical virtue had been attached to that hundred million-dollar limit, that particular sum had been a sort of fetich and when the reserve fell three millions short, and no immediate harm resulted, there was a feeling of relief

Secretary Carlisle does not seem to know just what to do. If he should issue bonds, the relief would be only temporary, for the market for our own bonds is more active here than abroad, because banks and other institutions are always seeking bonds for investment, and if they were sold abroad they would almost certainly come back here at once. If he should order all coin certificates to be paid only in silver the result in a short time must be to send gold to a premium, and to put values in this country on a silver basis.

The immediate outlook therefore, is not cheerful, but if we look ahead a little, we shall find that there is not the slightest occasion for alarm Several causes have contributed to the recent drain of gold First, there was the artificial demand created by the transference of the Austro-Hungarian fiscal system to a gold basis Second, there was a good deal of speculation and that is not yet ended on the part of capitalists who wished to make something out of the scarcity of gold, and to that end used all their endeavors to decrease the visible supply Third, and probably most potent of all, is the fact that the balance of trade for three months past has been against us The imports into the United States during March were $63,260,044 and the exports were only $42,377,468 Last year the exports for March were $60,278,824 and the imports only $55,011,153 in other words while the balance of trade for March 1892 was over five millions in our favor for March of this year it was nearly twenty one millions against us.

It is altogether improbable in fact almost impossible that this balance should long continue adverse An immense cotton crop probably $100,000,000 worth is to be marketed Our other crops promise well This year instead of our own people going abroad and spending tens of millions out of our own country thousands of Europeans will come here and bring millions with them Those causes will begin to operate in May and unless a panic is precipitated from sheer fright before June 1 relief after that time is as certain as anything future in the financial world can be

While the present situation therefore, is a grave one there is no occasion whatever for apprehension This is the richest country in the world and that fact is bound to tell before long

THE HOME RULE BILL

The passage of the Home Rule bill on its second reading is an important victory for Mr Gladstone but by no means settles the fate of that important measure In the United States Congress the fate of a measure usually depends upon action had at its third reading and the first two readings are often hurried through as mere matter of form with the implied understanding that no real discussion is to take place until the third reading The procedure of the English parliament is more formal and leisurely A bill when presented is read for the first time and ordered printed and a day fixed for its consideration At this second reading the principle of the bill is discussed and if approved it is usually committed to a committee of the whole House where every provision is open to debate and amendment Sometimes however it is referred to a select committee before going to the committee of the whole

It is therefore evident that the passage of the Home Rule bill on its second reading simply commits the House to the proposition that some change ought to be made in the relations of the empire towards Ireland and that Mr Gladstone's plan is on the whole, a good one. In the committee of the whole ... quality of ... will be ... only last ... by the privilege of every ... to speak as often as he pleases upon the question, though debate may be closed by order of the House

While the stage of the committee of the whole, a day is fixed for its consideration, and at this third reading the entire bill principle as well as amendments is open for discussion and review, and it may be again re committed to the committee

But although the bill will have a stormy way before it, and has indeed barely more than entered upon its parliamentary career now that the event predicted by Mr Gladstone has come to pass it is not alone under this aspect that the vote should be considered By it the imperial House of Commons is put on record as favoring a measure of Home Rule for Ireland and this of itself is no small accomplishment for Mr Gladstone and his party Such a vote marks an important step in the progress of English political institutions. It is a step which once taken cannot be easily retraced and whose record will always remain The way before the Home Rule bill is long and troublesome but it is open The British people by their official representatives, have taken a step towards granting to Ireland a measure of self government This alone is a great concession to the advocates of Home Rule

THE GALAPAGOS COALING STATION

It appears that we are not after all to have a coaling station at the Galapagos islands This is unfortunate, for such a station is badly needed Two years ago when the Charleston went to Chile after the Esmeralda she had to take aboard something like $20,000 worth of coal and was hampered by the necessity of husbanding her supply If there had been a United States coaling station on the way it would have been a very great convenience and the Galapagos islands are in a good place Lying off the west coast of Ecuador right under the Equator about 700 miles out at sea they are now almost if not totally uninhabited, and are useless to Ecuador. The water about them is very deep, and a coaling station could easily be established The islands are volcanic, but the craters with which they are covered are nearly all inactive The largest of the islands, Albemarle, is of considerable size, being 75 miles long and 15 broad.

Such coaling stations are a real necessity for the United States not only because they would be indispensable in time of war, but still more because they would be of great value in time of peace If we are to have a merchant marine, and develop our commerce in American steamships as all patriotic Americans hope we may, we must have such stations at convenient points in various parts of the world It is a matter of regret therefore, that the opportunity of securing the Galapagos for this purpose should have been thrown away

The Supreme Court of the United States is to hold a special session May 8 to 15 to have argument on the Constitutionality of the Geary Chinese exclusion act. It is expected that several Chinese will be arrested May 6 for not complying with the provisions of the act, and the case taken at once to the Supreme Court. The present Solicitor General Mr Aldrich, will have charge of the case as his successor Mr Maxwell, will not be formally invested with office until June 1

The sincerity of the Austrian government in refusing to receive Max Judd as Consul General for the United States at Vienna will soon be put to a practical proof The refusal was placed solely on the ground that Mr Judd is a former Austrian subject, and the government disavowed any desire to discriminate against him on account of his Jewish blood Mr Cleveland will send another Jew who is not of Austrian birth

The Senate Committee appointed to visit the Territories and see whether they are ready to become States will leave Chicago June 10 They go first to Utah, then to Arizona and New Mexico, and home by way of Oklahoma Senator Faulkner of West Virginia is chairman but the other members of the subcommittee that will do the visiting are not yet selected

The Expense of Our Foreign Ministers.

How pinched our diplomatic agents are was well illustrated in Mr Lowell's time. A rich American fond of his country, and wishing to leave a monument to his liberality and patriotism decided to purchase a fitting legation house in London for the American Minister but Mr Lowell begged him not to carry out his generous intention during his term of office for the cost of maintaining such a house would have been nearly three times his salary Mr Lincoln has lived becomingly but modestly during his tenure of the English mission but he recently stated to a friend that his annual expenditure has been $35,000, or just double his salary

What the expenditure of an embassy will be depends on the means of the ambassador, but if our ambassador to London or to Paris were to be paid a salary equal to that of the President, he would not be able to do more than return the official courtesies of the country to which he was accredited and of his fellow members of the corps.

All of this means that an American ambassador who has no private fortune will be unhappy and unhappy men cannot successfully transact business If present pay is inadequate for ministers, it is absurd for ambassadors, and yet Congress is not likely to increase salaries It has sanctioned a title authorized by the constitution, but is unwilling to pay for what the title calls For several years the fact has been recognized that only rich men or at least men who had something beyond their pay could afford to accept the London Paris or Berlin mission Mr Lowell and Mr Phelps being exceptions The raising of the grade to an ambassadorship makes the obstacles to poor men all the greater An impecunious ambassador would be ridiculous and as the increase of rank is practically of no benefit to the country the sooner we return to the old rank the better The country will be better represented by a self respecting minister than by an ambassador who is the object of universal commiseration because his meagre salary compels him to live in lodgings — Harper's Weekly

Too Late

What ... that the enlightened sense of North Carolina will say that the Governors ... at Raleigh was held too late by several months The Governors put out a fine document pleading for immigrants and capital but the fact remains that under the influence of half baked statesmen and short-sighted third party men this State practically ignored the greatest opportunity it will probably have in this generation to exploit the claims of North Carolina to her share of the world's men and money No appropriation worth mentioning for the World's Fair but a convention of governors months too late to do any real good It's enough to disgust a grandmother — ... the N C ...

Stories and Gossip Picked Up on the Streets

Mr H C Hall the attorney, of this city who was until very recently connected with the American legation in Paris as legal adviser in speaking of the promotion of the American Minister to the rank of Ambassador expressed himself as much gratified He says that it will place the Minister in a much better position and save him much embarrassment. Our Ministers to France for many years have been men of large wealth who have been able to entertain in a proper manner, and have therefore occupied a distinguished social position and thereby been able to do more as simple ministers than their rank would ordinarily permit. As an Ambassador our representative will take rank among the best of them If he calls upon the French Minister of State or the representatives of other nations on any matter of business, he will be given precedence The spectacle has often been presented of the Minister of this great country waiting for hours in the ante chamber of some foreign statesman for his turn to come while the representatives of miserable little States not bigger than El Paso county passed in ahead of him simply because they ranked as Ambassadors. To prevent humiliations of this kind interviews have usually been arranged before hand, for our Ministers but occasionally there came times when this was impossible Our representative, on account of his rank, has often been placed in unpleasant situations at social and State functions.

A friend tells me a horse story that is decidedly good, and he is ready to vouch for its truth He lays the scene in St Louis, but it really sounds a bit like Chicago. It seems that a wealthy gentleman stumbled on to a horse of good appearance and which he found to be a trotter with a high speed Now it happened that the horse had formerly been driven to a street car (the most improbable part of the story is that a horse could be sound and trot after serving on a St. Louis street car line) The owner did not know the horse's history, but a friend of his did. This friend also had a horse, which was not very remarkable for speed, but he matched a race with the owner of the trotter for $500. This false friend placed a street car bell on his sulky The race was started and the trotter was just forging ahead when "clank" came the bell and the ex street car animal, true to his training slowed up his pace. He refused to go on until two peals from the bell gave him warning This was kept up all the way around the track, the slow horse finally ambling in at a comfortable pace.

While talking horse I will relate another anecdote of a once prominent St. Louis man J B C. Lucas, who died not many years ago worth many millions of dollars and whose name is perpetrated in the beautiful street, Lucas Place, once purchased a new horse. He took his wife out for a drive and the animal soon started at a furious pace Mr Lucas pulled at the reins, but the harder he pulled the faster the horse went. Coming to a level place he said to his wife, "I will hold him steady and you jump out and then I will follow you" His wife jumped out and he prepared to do the same, but as he slacked on the reins to jump the horse stopped The animal had been trained for a trotter

Perhaps there is not a person of mature years in this city who does not know that the James boys and the Younger boys were the ideal outlaws of the west for many years. There are few however who know that one of the Younger boys is buried at Evergreen cemetery this city Bruce Younger, the youngest of the family died at Colorado City and was buried in September 1889. He had been living at Colorado City for a year or two and was a prominent character among the sporting fraternity He used his proper name as it is said that he was never mixed up in the wrong doing of his brothers. He was a powerful man physically and was notorious among his acquaintances for the amount of whisky he could drink. At the time of his death he was without money and the sporting people of Colorado City supplied the funds for his burial a notorious woman of the town supplying most of it A story has recently been printed to the effect that a fossilized body supposed to be that of Bruce Younger had been found in a cave in the Guadaloupe mountains and had been identified by a sister of Bruce living at Gainesville Tex This is ridiculous to those who know the truth A sister of the Younger boys resides in Kansas City and she denies the existence of a sister at Gainesville She says that Bruce died at Colorado City and was buried here She also declares that he was never associated with the James boys and that Frank James would not know him if he was alive to day Bruce would be 42 years old if he were alive Cole Younger the eldest is serving a life sentence in the Minnesota penitentiary

Mr Henry T Williams has returned to the city from his winter home on the Gulf of Mexico where he has been engaged in planting an extensive vineyard of foreign grapes having over 170 varieties in cultivation Mr Williams has been principally known to the people of this city for a number of years as the proprietor of Williams's Gardens of West Colorado Springs and of the large wholesale produce business conducted here for so long a time There is however a character born by him in the history of this city and the development of this State which is not generally known to our readers. Mr Williams was formerly one of the editors of the New York Independent and the organizer and ... of numerous Editorial excursions which he personally conducted each summer in order to give eastern editors an opportunity to visit and see the wonders of our scenery and through the columns of their journals make known the attractions of travel health and beauty to western tourists and invalids Until that time Colorado was an unknown world to the people of the Eastern States His own articles in the Independent and the beneficial results of these editorial excursions created and stimulated a tide of travel and interest in the direction which have largely resulted in building up this era of prosperity

Visiting Man tou on one of these excursions before a house was built or even the stakes driven for the survey of the city of Colorado Springs, he with some of the party ascended Pike's Peak on foot Returning they found that the ladies, by invitation of Gen R A Cameron had named a pretty canon Williams' Canon in honor of Mr Williams whence its name is retained to this day The botanists of the party had named the beautiful canon where Ruxton Creek flows "Engleman canon after Professor Engleman of St Louis Cameron's Cone was named after Gen Cameron and many other names were given to prominent objects which are still retained At this time the country was so unsettled that but two houses were found between Fairplay and Manitou Returning from one of these summer excursions Mr Williams was introduced by the Editor in Chief of the Independent, to Mrs. Helen Hunt with the statement that she desired to visit Colorado and California, and write a new volume of American travel as a companion to her recently published "Bits of Travel in Europe" Mr Williams arranged the trip for her To this little incident is due the visit of Mrs Hunt to this State and the opening before her of a new field of interest in the western world, which led to her permanent residence here, and identification with the history of Colorado It is also noteworthy that the first excursion over the first mile built on the Denver and Rio Grande railroad, was tendered to Mr Williams and his party Prof or F V Hayden of the United States Exploring and Geographical survey was a special friend of Mr Williams and in his government report of Colorado retained all the names conferred by the Williams party, on all the prominent objects of ... in this vicinity Also in his own publishing business Mr Williams ... for the government, from plates supplied by Prof Hayden the celebrated Hayden map of Colorado, the first accurate geographical and topographical map of the State also later in 1876, he published the well known and expensive volume known as "Williams Pacific Tourist and Guide Across the Continent," which has done much to stimulate travel to the west and the Pacific coast. This is but a small part of a busy life Mr Williams was editor and proprietor of the celebrated "Downings Horticulturist' twenty five years ago, originated and published "The Ladies' Floral Cabinet' and his name is well known among many households for his popular books, "Household Elegancies," "Window Gardening" etc.

A Phantom Inspector

In compliance with the generally expressed wish of the mining fraternity, the last Assembly ... decided to make an appropriation for the maintenance of an inspector of metalliferous mines notwithstanding which the Governor has appointed a person to fill the office, and the presumption is that the appointee, a competent man no doubt, will assume to discharge the duties of the position depending upon some future legislature to make an appropriation for his relief or a court to allow his claim The same thing was done by Governor Routt in the matter of the railway commissionership and the incumbent of the office for the past two years has applied for a mandamus to compel the auditor to approve a certificate of indebtedness in his favor for services alleged to have been rendered We think both governors erred in thus attempting to foist upon the people an office the necessity for which is not recognized and under circumstances which can hardly fail to saddle upon the treasury a considerable expense whether the money is drawn from it in the shape of salaries or as attorney fees or both Had there been any demand for the rehabilitation of the office of inspector of metalliferous mines the assembly would have responded ... it, and made provision for its maintenance but there was not only an entire absence of any such demand but more ... clamor for the repeal of the old law Our friendly advice to Mr ... is to imitate the wise example of ... and decline to accept the ... office He is too good a man to waste his time in fulfilling the duties of a place which the people have acquiesced in ... abolishing and in following the commonwealth ... after with a legal ... that sort of business — Leadville Herald Democrat

MANITOU NOTES.

The season at Manitou is opening earlier this year than usual, and it is predicted by those who are in a position to know that the tourist travel to the spa will be fully up to that of last year, and the season will undoubtedly last longer. It is stated, also, that the demand for cottages exceeds former years. The hotels however, are well equipped and will be ready to accommodate all who come.

The Cliff house has been enlarged. A new addition of thirty-six rooms has been added—all en suite, with bath, etc., to each. These rooms are elegantly furnished in white cherry, birdseye maple and natural oak. The hotel throughout is comfortable, cosy and home-like. The Barker hotel has also been improved and refurnished in part, and on account of its central location will always be popular. The other large hotels will open about June 1.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Wheeler and family are expected in Manitou from their European trip about May 1...

Judge A. L. Williams of Topeka, Kan., is at the Cliff house and will remain some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Roberts of Waltham, Mass., are registered at the Cliff house. Mr. Roberts is a brother of Mrs. Jro Hulburt of Manitou.

Mr. and Mrs. Mears, Mrs. Jonathan Slade and Miss Slade, all of Chicago, are among the late arrivals at the Cliff.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowe of Manchester, Eng., are registered at the Barker. Mr Lowe is a member of Parliament.

E. G. Thurber of New York and J. Patrick of Ireland, both stopping at the Barker, walked to Pike's Peak on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Van Buren and two sisters, prominent people of New York, are guests at the Barker.

H. B. Jenkins, one of the oldest hotel clerks in Colorado, will be found behind the clerk's desk at the Barker this season.

The Manitou Mineral Water company is running to its full capacity.

The seventy-fourth anniversary of Odd Fellowship in America will be celebrated by the local order on Wednesday, the 26th inst. in Wheeler Hall. An invitation has been extended to Pike's Peak lodge at Colorado Springs and the lodge at Colorado City, and both have signified their intention to be present in a body. Many prominent Odd Fellows throughout the State will also be present. A street parade will be given at 7 o'clock, headed by the Manitou brass band. Supper will be served by the Rebeccas, and the affair will wind up with a grand ball of fifty numbers.

The Pike's Peak Mineral Water company are increasing their capacity and are putting in additional machinery, which will all be completed and ready for ... within a month or six weeks. They will then have the facilities for turning out a carload of bottled water a day.

VOICE CULTURE.

AN UNEQUALLED OPPORTUNITY FOR COLORADO SPRINGS

Madame Maigille the Celebrated Solo Soprano and Teacher of Voice Culture ... Her Cooperation ...

It is well known that amateurs often spoil their voices by singing in an improper way. Those who study under Madam Maigille apply the correct method from the start and are absolutely sure of proceeding throughout upon the right principles.

Madam Maigille is a most charming woman socially, as well as a distinguished artist. She is a member of Sorosis, of the Brooklyn Woman's club, perhaps the most exclusive organization of its kind, and of other associations of the highest standing. Madam Maigille has of course spent much time abroad.

While there she was on terms of social intimacy with such distinguished people as the Duke and Duchess di Schiave, the Contessa di Lucca, and the Duchess di Belligiosioso, in Rome, the Duc de Morny, Duc d'Aumale, Princesse de Sagan, and the Comtesse de Mouzilly, at Paris.

She brings letters of introduction from some of the best known society people in Brooklyn, and will be, no doubt, a distinct addition to the society of Colorado Springs.

Among the commendations received by Madam Maigille from prominent educators and musicians, Professor Charles E. West, principal of Brooklyn Heights Seminary, writes as follows:

"It gives me much pleasure to state that Madam Helen Maigille had charge of the department of voice culture and the art of singing in the seminary under my care, and proved herself to be a highly accomplished and successful teacher. I most cheerfully recommend her to any musical conservatory or educational institution having a department of vocal music, as a successful teacher in developing the voice and in creating a taste for music in her pupils."

President A. N. Pentield of the "New York Music Teachers' Association," writes:

"I have known Mme. Helen Maigille for a number of years and have been familiar with her ... as a concert and church singer, and as a teacher of vocal culture. Her method of teaching has proved highly successful, and I am glad to recommend her, both for her profession, abilities and her personal qualities."

J. H. Sterling, M. D., of 227 Schermerhorn street, Brooklyn, says in a personal letter to Mme. Maigille:

"I take great pleasure in recommending ... of vocal music, because of ... for while you thoroughly develop the voice, your methods are such you also develop ... breathing, lung capacity, the latter a condition most needed by many of our would-be singers."

Ezra M. Mosher, M. D., 58 Joralemon street, Brooklyn, says:

"It gives me pleasure to state that I consider Mme. Maigille an uncommonly fine instructor in vocal culture. Her students in Brooklyn excel in naturalness and pureness of tone in singing and especially in perfection of vocalization."

She is also introduced by the Chickerings, Steinways, Mr. G. Schirmer of New York and many other distinguished musicians.

The people of Colorado Springs are certainly to be congratulated upon the advent among them of such a distinguished and scientific teacher of voice culture as Madam Maigille.

She has established herself at No. 612 North Tejon street, where she will receive pupils, and test the voices of any who desire to take advantage of her skill. Sometime this week she proposes to hold a reception in the parlors of the Antlers hotel, cards of invitation to which will be issued.

Mexico is full of interest for its antiquities, scenery, people, customs and architecture. You will learn much about these things by attending the lecture, "Glimpses of Mexico," which will be given by Rev. Richard Montague, D. D., in the High school auditorium, May 12.

The dedication exercises of the Second Presbyterian church, Seventh street and Washington avenue, West Side, will occur at 11 o'clock this morning. The pastor, Rev. G. H. De Long, will be assisted by Rev. Dr. Kirkwood, Rev. Mr. Boyle and others.

M. Johnson & Co. announce that they have purchased the entire stock of crockery and glassware of the De La Vergne Furniture company at a great reduction and will sell it at eastern wholesale prices.

Sherwood Aldrich gives the "indications" on some of the principal stocks on the market in his adv. today. Mr. Aldrich is well posted in the mining market, and has always exercised good judgment.

N. O. Johnson & Sons advertise that they will open to-morrow a variety of new dress goods, silks, challies, ribbons, muslin underwear, new capes and suits. Also, new designs in ginghams, lawns, and fine outing flannels.

Commencing to-morrow The Consolidated Stationery Company will inaugurate a general clearance sale on their entire stock. Persons will do well to investigate before purchasing elsewhere. Special lines and prices will be advertised in the GAZETTE columns from time to time.

Miss Edinger is now pleasantly located in her quarters at No. 9 Pike's Peak avenue. Her opening on Wednesday was a great success and hundreds of ladies visited her parlors and expressed themselves in words of the highest praise. There are seven different departments all handsomely furnished. The ladies' bath will be one of the principal features and a great convenience. Personal attention will be given to face steaming, all kinds of chiropodist work, hair dressing and treatment of the scalp, shampooing, manicuring and electric massage for the face. Miss Edinger is thoroughly familiar in every department, and ladies visiting her place will always get the best of treatment.

If you contemplate building you will find it to your advantage to go to Gillis Bros. & Walsh.

New York Stock Market.

NEW YORK, April 22.—Money on call has been nominally 4 per cent. The stock market closed generally weak.

The stock market was erratic in its course throughout the morning. The professional element had the market all to themselves, and were apparently much mixed if the frequent changes in their position afforded a criterion. The temper of speculation changed almost half hourly, and the fluctuations, if not wide, were frequent, although the sales were small, aggregating only 123,120 shares.

The continued engagements of gold for export to Europe had a depressing effect, while the unexpectedly good bank statement led to a slight rally. At the start prices ran off ¼ to 1⅛ per cent., the latter in General Electric, which reached the lowest of the week.

iced and made to feel that they are thrice welcome. Every night the deacons will meet in the parlors of the church and visiting believers from all over the world, whether they are affiliated with this particular denomination or not, will be assured of a hearty hand grasp and a kindly greeting that comes from the heart.

This is not an isolated instance, but simply an indication of what is to be done on a general scale to the end that our visitors may feel that, although they are away from their own churches and their familiar religious surroundings, they are yet in a Christian city, with the warmth of Christian fraternity on every hand. Fifteen pastors, representing churches with a membership of considerably over 10,000, have united together for the purpose of securing a convenient location where services can be held for those who share the views of these churches in religious matters. Suitable headquarters in a central portion of the city, where visitors may be received and welcomed on week days, are now being sought, and the Auditorium, or maybe one of the immense armories, will be secured for mass religious services on Sunday afternoons.

Sunday school scholars as well as their teachers are also to be well cared for. Funds have been subscribed, thanks to the energy of the local representatives of the International Sunday School association and the generosity of friends of the rising generation throughout the land, for a World's fair model Sunday school building. Perhaps it might not be invidious in this connection to remark that over one-half of the amount required was contributed by Cook county and other sections of Illinois alone.

The structure will be a kind of religious headquarters, where Christian workers may meet and exchange ideas and experiences, while it will afford accommodation for Sunday school conferences and evangelistic meetings. These latter, according to the plans as outlined, will be under the direction of Dwight L. Moody, the noted evangelist. Noonday revival services will be a feature of the programme, and as the building will be in close proximity to the fair grounds the psalms of praise of the worshipers will mingle every midday with the strains from the monster organ in Festival hall.

For many a year to come hundreds of thousands of people, scattered maybe over the face of the globe, may treasure one of the most precious of the many souvenirs that will be carried away from Jackson park. This will be a copy of the New Testament. It will be obtainable at the exhibit of the American Bible society in the building devoted to manufactures and liberal arts, or rather in Department L of that vast structure, to be found in the gallery that runs its entire length. A first installment of no less than ... copies will be stacked up in the booth of the society when the fair gates open on the 1st of May. This souvenir of souvenirs can be had for the asking without money and without price.

[Special Correspondence.]

ABERDEEN, S. D., April 20.—I have spent some little time in traveling through North and South Dakota recently, and I am strongly impressed with the changes that have taken place since 1885. At that time the Dakotas were beginning to feel the depression following the years of "boom" and inflation incident to the completion of the Northern Pacific road in the north and the rapid immigration in the south. There was no crash and little distress, but the influx of population to a country suited to agriculture but with scarcely the scratch of a plan on hundreds of square miles of its broad level lands, demanded capital, and the many young men who had come west with little but brain, muscle and energy were forced to look elsewhere for employment.

The South Dakota of today is on a much more substantial footing than in the days of glistening promises and wild ... booms. Irrigation in some parts and the certainty of more regular crops will make her a healthy state. The newly opened land of the Sioux reservation beyond the Missouri river make room for a large population, but South Dakota is ... putting forward the temptation ... capital and offers ... and fair returns for it. The Dakota of the early eighties was an ... plain, the paradise of the real estate speculator and the boom shark. Two things work the difference in the Dakota of the early nineties, viz, the disappearance of the 2 per cent a month investment companies and the enormous increase in the acreage of wheat.

Happenings of the Past Week Throughout the Town

[illegible]

... Casino, N. Y.

... gave a delightful dancing ... Wednesday evening last at her ... North Nevada avenue.

Mr. H. C. Van Schaack of Denver entertained Mrs. Peter Van Schaack of Chicago at The Antlers last week.

Mrs. M. C. Bouvier and Miss Bouvier, who spent last week in Leadville, have returned and are visiting friends in town.

Dr. Gillette, the new superintendent of the school for the deaf and blind, was in charge of the Illinois school for forty years.

Hon. James G. Ray and Prof. and Mrs. Burrington, well known in educational circles in Massachusetts, are spending a few days in the city.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the First Congregational church will give a social at the residence of Mr. Giles Crissey, 501 N. Nevada avenue, on Monday evening.

Mr and Mrs. J. J. Hagerman left last evening for New York. Mr. Hagerman has taken a flat in New York and the family will be absent for several months.

Miss Everhart of Chicago, who spent last summer in Colorado Springs, has returned for a visit of several weeks. Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Galbraith of Erie, Pa., are sojourners with Miss Everhart.

The recital by Mrs. Fannie Aiken-Tucker under the auspices of the Colorado Springs Musical club was unfortunately again postponed owing to Mrs. Tucker's severe cold.

There was quite a company of Colorado Springs folks who went to the Paderewski recitals in Denver last week. Among them were Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Tou... , Miss C..., Miss Noyes, and Miss Corkill.

Mr and Mrs. Frank Roby entertained a party of friends very pleasantly Thursday evening at their home on North Tejon street. At the card tables Mrs. W. W. Price won the ladies' prize and Mr. E. E. Martin the gentlemen's prize.

Among the arrivals at The Antlers this week were a party of ladies prominent in New York social circles. They were Miss Whitney, Miss Kernochan and Miss Baldwin. They will remain in the city for several days longer viewing the scenery and taking the drives.

Mr. Frank Taft will give an organ recital at the First Congregational church next Tuesday evening. It will be under the auspices of the Young People's Societies of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches and a large audience is promised.

Mrs. F. L. Martin and Mrs. ... Martin gave a delightful afternoon tea on Friday afternoon in honor of their guest, Mrs. Horton. The tea was one of the most largely attended that has been given in this city, fully 150 ladies being present throughout the afternoon.

One of the most pleasing events of the week was the presentation of the cantata "King Rene's Daughter" by the pupils of Mrs. Ernest Whitney at the High school auditorium, Thursday evening. The singing of soloists and chorus was excellent and the accompaniment of Miss Noyes was thoroughly good and could scarcely have been improved upon.

The principal social event in Denver the past week was the marriage of Marie Boyce Turner to Edward Marsden Cooke. The groom was formerly connected with THE GAZETTE, which he left to become private secretary to Governor Cooper. He is now one of the clerks of the Supreme Court. The ceremony occurred at St. John's Cathedral last Wednesday evening, Rev. Dean Hart officiating, in the presence of some 500 guests. The maid of honor was Miss Edith Turner, sister of the bride, and the groom's best man was his brother, Hadley Vicars Cooke. The bridesmaids were the Misses Margaret Patterson, Susie Mellen, Mary Jackson of Ft. Logan, Harriett Turner of St. Louis, Grace Hibbard of Chicago, Lucy Wilkinson of Northampton, M..., and the ushers David B. Turner, Orlando B. Willcox, Theodore G. Lewis, Theodore Boal, Chas. M. Willcox of Denver, and Harry S. Turner of Colorado Springs. After the ceremony a dinner was served the wedding party at the home of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Emory S. Turner, 1749 Pearl street. Mr. and Mrs. Cooke left for Salt Lake the same evening, but will return and occupy Dr. Turner's residence for several months while Mr. and Mrs. Turner are in Europe.

The following were introduced at the club the past week: E. Butler, England; W. J. Trowbridge, New Haven; Michel Bouvier, New York; C. W. Hamilton, Omaha; E. McCammon, New York; C. A. Day, Chicago; J. H. Waters, Aspen; Caldwell Yeoman, Denver; M. ... Farnum, L. L. Barrington, Franklin, Ma...; Dr Henry Paul, Denver; J. G. Ray, New York; Henry Tarbell, Denver; T. B. Nuptial Music.

Mrs. Tucker is unable to sing at the Frank Taft concert, Tuesday evening, but Miss Daisy Gloucester of Denver will give two numbers. An unusual pleasure is promised in Miss Gloucester. Tickets on sale at Robinson's and the Cornet Leaf book store. Tickets 50 cents. Following is the programme:

[illegible]

Hallen and Hart.

Hallen and Hart, two of the most successful of all those who have devoted their talents purely to farce comedy, will present their new play, "The Idea," at the opera house Friday night, April 28. These capable fun makers are now so well known and liked that no special mention is necessary to attract general interest. Aside from their own individual merits, they have always surrounded themselves with the cleverest of performers and singers, with the result of an entertainment which has stood out among the rest of its class with singular virtues and success. This year they bring forth an entirely new piece, upon which they are said to have been thoughtfully at work for a long time. The company is unusually large and individually strong. The central character in "The Idea" is an ... re-former.

James J. Corbett with his company will present "Gentleman Jack" at the Opera House tomorrow night. Mr. Corbett will assume in the rôle of the hero, Jack Royden, the part of college student, bank clerk, professor of boxing and champion pugilist. All of these rôles this somewhat remarkable young man has played in real life. Dramatist Vincent took memorable incidents in Corbett's life and wove them into the play. Corbett was known as a college student while acquiring his education at the college of the Sacred Heart in San Francisco; he was known as a bank clerk while filling the responsible position as paying teller of the Nevada Bank of San Francisco. He was afterwards professor of boxing at the well known Olympic Athletic club of San Francisco, and on Sept. 24 was proclaimed the champion heavy weight pugilist of the world at New Orleans. The last two scenes are an exact reproduction of that event.

At the First M. E. church Monday evening, April 24, Dr. A. B. Hyde of Denver University will open his course of lectures on English literature. Those who attend this course are assured both instruction and entertainment. The remarkable ability and attractive style peculiar to himself is nowhere revealed so strongly as in this kind of work, to which Dr. Hyde has been devoted most of his mature years. Broadly cultured through travel and study, a profound thinker, to which is added a poetic temperament and genial wit, no man in the ... is better qualified to treat this subject, which is one of universal interest, than Dr. Hyde. Tickets for the course of six lectures may be secured for $1. Single admission tickets 25 cents. Tickets may be secured at the door.

[illegible] WOMAN.

Two of the [illegible] romances of Henryk Sienkiewicz have recently been reviewed in these columns. "Without Dogma," translated by Iza Young, is by the same author and is issued in this country by the same publishers, Little, Brown & Co. of Boston. In the former novels, the great Polish romancer has showed himself the greatest living master of historical fiction. In this volume he deals with a subject totally and essentially different, so different indeed that it is hard to believe that the same man could have written this book who wrote the others. "Without Dogma" is a psychological novel of the most intensely subjective sort [illegible] to the last degree. Self analysis has never been carried further. On this account it [illegible] of the journals of Amiel and of Marie Bashkirtseff, those two frankest of modern self revealers. If it lacks a little the interest that attaches to autobiography, for we cannot be sure that Sienkiewicz identifies his hero with himself, and indeed we are sure after reading "Fire and Sword" and "The Deluge" that he cannot be thus identified, nevertheless the power of the story is such that the reader must needs feel that Leon Ploszowski is real, that he lived and suffered, and that we have here his inmost thoughts and feelings faithfully recorded.

The plot of the story is comparatively simple, the incidents are few. Leon Ploszowski is a young man of great natural talent who has been highly educated and has seen life in all its forms. He is the very quintessence of the most modern man of the world. His mind is so cultivated that he always looks on all sides of a question before acting, and while he is thus turning it over, a lover the moment for action is past. His sensibilities are so refined that little things produce upon him an effect out of all proportion to their real significance. He doubts everything and everybody until he falls under the power of an overmastering love,—and even then he goes on doubting. And the worst of it is that he is perfectly conscious all the time of his own defects. "I have the unshaken conviction that I am better than my actions. The cause of the latter is a certain incapacity of life, partly the inheritance of my race and the [illegible] of the times in which I live, and finally that over-analysis which [illegible] not permit me to follow the first simple impulse of nature, but criticizes until it reduces the soul to utter impotence. * * * It appears to me that my cultured people are attacked by the [illegible]. Criticism of our [illegible] and everything else is corroding [illegible] active powers, we have no stable [illegible] no point of [illegible] faith in life. [illegible] the reason why I do not [illegible] so much to win Aniela as I am [illegible] of being [illegible]. In speaking of a [illegible] on to our time, I will not [illegible] myself exclusively to my own [illegible] just as [illegible] takes to his bed [illegible] is raging, is a very [illegible], nowadays critic [illegible] of everything is the epidemic [illegible] raging all over the world. The result is that various [illegible] that sheltered men collapse over their heads. Religion, the very name of which means [illegible] is getting unloosed. Faith, even in those who still believe, is getting [illegible]tive. Though the roof of what we call Fatherland social cur[illegible] begin to filter. There remains only one ideal in presence of which the most hardened sceptic raises his hat—the People. But on the [illegible] of this statue mischievous spirits are beginning already to scribble more or less ribald jokes, and what is still more strange, the mist of unbelief is [illegible]ing from the hands of those who, in the nature of things, ought to bow down reverently. Finally there will come a gifted sceptic a[illegible] Heine, to spit and trample on the idol, as in his time did Aristophanes. He will not, however, trample on it in the name of old ideals but in the name of freedom of thought, and what will happen then I do not know. Most likely on the huge, clean [illegible] slate the Devil will write sonnets."

This fatal indecision causes Ploszowski to lose the woman he loves and who loves him, and thereafter his life is spent in a vain attempt to regain her. The woman herself is most admirably drawn. Aniela is as real a heroine as any in fiction. The story ends disastrously, as such a story must. One might as well expect Hamlet and Ophelia to marry and live happy ever afterward as to expect anything but a tragic close to a career like that depicted here.

The volume is full of most quotable things, of epigrams, sayings that cut into the heart of things, observations on life, on women, on literature, that are striking, original, full of suggestion. Here is a bit on Shakespeare:

"It seems to me surpassing strange that a man of my time, in whatever position or complicated trouble of soul, should find so much analogy to himself as I find in this drama. Hamlet, based upon Holinshed's sanguinary and gross legend. Hamlet is the human soul as it was, as it is, and as it will be. In conceiving this drama Shakespeare overstepped the limit fixed even for genius. I can understand Homer and Dante studied by the light of their epoch. I can comprehend that they could do what they did, but how an Englishman of the Seventeenth century could foreknow psychosis, a science of recent growth, will be to me, in spite of my study of Hamlet, an everlasting mystery."

Here is another piece of philosophy that goes deep:

"What erroneous ideas have our novelists, and for the matter of that even our physiologists, about the decaying races! They fancy that inward incapacity must invariably correspond with physical deterioration, small build, weak muscles, anaemic brain and weak intelligence. This may be the case now and then, but to regard it as a general principle is a mistake and a pedantic repetition of the same thing over and over again. The descendants of worn-out races have no lack of vital powers, but they lack harmony among these powers. * * * We live in anarchy, and it is a known fact that in anarchy society cannot exist. [illegible] of the powers drags its own way [illegible] all the others with it, and [illegible] produces [illegible] excesses. * * People do not realize [illegible] that [illegible] anarchy of the vital powers is a far greater [illegible] than physical or mental anaemia."

There must be an end of quotation, although what has been given may give the reader a false idea of the book as being a philosophical disquisition rather than the tragedy of a personal human soul. There is in it no lack of vivid personal interest. If it is not a real autobiography, it was perfect in similitude [illegible] ever was written.

The moral [illegible] a book is to be inferred, not taught, directly in its pages [illegible] its completeness would be spoiled by any preaching of the author. But a most powerful moral lesson [illegible] this [illegible] cannot [illegible].

BRIEF NOTICES

[illegible] very [illegible] great [illegible] last month's number [illegible] Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen [illegible] The same is a pretty [illegible] of the literary quality [illegible] we try to [illegible] without reference.

[illegible] that may be argued there [illegible] thinks at the story in this way it is [illegible] worth reading. The heroine [illegible] of the most [illegible] women we ever meet in a [illegible] is well told and [illegible] The heroine [illegible] is charming [illegible] Mrs Harland [illegible] the splendid [illegible] at the World's Fair and [illegible] Miss Eleanor [illegible] with great enthusiasm and has drawn her portrait in a sort of [illegible] style that is [illegible] effective.

The colored illustrations are of Mrs Potter Palmer and Mrs F S Winston of Chicago. This by the way being a special Chicago number, and they show us two handsome women in full dress. We do not have a very high opinion of this "journalistic" sort of enterprise which presents colored pictures of "society women," but the majority of readers probably like it and the magazine is published for them, not for us.

John Habberton's book reviews are better done this month than usual. The new editor with his "Search Light" has found a grammar somewhere, and talks in an off hand style about several more or less interesting topics. The department of fashions is as full as ever. It is a pleasure to look at fashion plates in which the women are represented as something less than nine feet tall. We cannot conscientiously say, however, that it is a pleasure to look at the coming styles of dress. They are apparently meant to make a woman look as much as possible like an hour glass, and some of them are little short of being hideous.

Jules Verne's books are usually one or the other of two kinds. There are the romances of "inventional science," and the volumes of adventure in strange lands. To the latter class belongs his latest story, published by Cassell & Co., under the Franco-Irish name of "Mistress Branican" (Branigan). French writers as a rule are not particularly strong on geography, and Jules Verne is no exception to the rule. The exuberance of his imagination extends even to the location of the scenes of his stories. He carelessly places Tennessee "several hundred miles" away from San Diego in "Lower California" and goes on with the story. And the story is certainly an interesting one. Mrs. Branican loses her husband, loses her child and loses her mind, all in a way that [illegible] the reader that it was done entirely for his entertainment, then she gets a large fortune from the Tennessee uncle and by its help recovers her husband from Central Australia, her son from the bottom of the sea, and her mind from nobody knows where, and all in a way highly entertaining to the novice or the juvenile, but in which the machinery shows rather plainly to the reader of experience. The necessary villain is of a mild sort who performs his part with all the lack of success requisite and then conveniently dies, and there is Verne's usual eccentric Englishman, this time in search of a particular hat to add to his already large collection. Of its class "Mistress Branican" is not a bad example, but an adult taste for this sort of literature is not a subject for congratulation. No one will be any the worse for reading "Mistress Branican," but on the contrary it will make no one any wiser or better, and the time spent in its perusal might be employed with much more profit and pleasure.

For a kindly old fashioned story of sea and land, of love and adventure, of pathos and patriotism, of hope deferred and of final happiness, with a sea fight worthy of the best pages of Marryat, read "The Blue Pavilions," written by "Q" and published by Cassell Publishing Company of New York. Captain John and Captain Jemmy are two delightful, lovable, quarrelsome heroes, whose acquaintance the reader cannot fail to enjoy, and who indeed are immeasurably superior to the insipid hero and the insignificant heroine. "The Blue Pavilions" is neither a novel of purpose nor a psychological study nor, except to a very mild degree, disguised history. It is simply a good story well told, and those who wish to be interested and amused for an idle hour may seek a long time before finding a more entertaining volume.

LITERARY NOTES

With but a single exception, Edwin A. Abbey's superb illustrations of Shakespeare's comedy "Love's Labor Lost," with comment by Andrew Lang, the leading illustrated article in Harper's Magazine for May, will create an American sensation. The artistic and decorative features of the World's Fair viewed as a complete and harmonious aggregation will be described by Candace Wheeler in an article entitled "A Dream City," profusely and beautifully illustrated from drawings by F. V. Du Mond, F. H. Hashfield and others. The first paper in a series of articles on "The Evolution of New York" will be contributed by Thomas A. Janvier with several maps of old New York, and characteristic illustrations by Howard Pyle. In an article entitled "A Discontented Province," Mary L. [illegible] will give the results of an intimate study of the French Canadians in the Province of Quebec which will be appropriately illustrated by C. S. Reinhart. A. Conan Doyle's great romance, "The Refugees," will be continued, [illegible] a [illegible] of thrilling episodes of Indian adventure which will supply the themes for several striking illustrations by T. de Thulstrup. Constance Fenimore Woolson's American novel, "Horace Chase," will also be continued and there will be short stories by Brander Matthews and Eva Wilder McGlasson. Charles Eliot Norton will write a critical and appreciative sketch of James Russell Lowell, and the life and work of Phillips Brooks will be the subject of an interesting memorial article by his brother, the Rev. Arthur Brooks, D.D. Mr. De [illegible] will contribute a characteristic paper on "The French Share of [illegible]." Julian Ralph will continue his very popular studies of the great West in a graphic description of Colorado and its Capital. In the Editor's Study Charles Dudley Warner will discuss a variety of subjects both social and literary, and the Editor's Drawer will contain the usual variety of wit and humor, anecdote and repartee, introduced by another of Thomas Nelson Page's unrivaled character sketches.

The Southern writers of fiction are condemned by The Baltimore Sun on the ground that they have too often found their profit in catering to Northern prejudice. This class of writers, The Sun says, make their money by misrepresenting the real people of the South, exhibiting imaginary classes of poor whites, crackers, mountain whites, etc., as if they really existed, and pandering to the desire of unfriendly readers to see old enemies put in an unfavorable light. Exceptional monstrosities are held up as Southern types, to the great glee of the untraveled Northerner, who is led to hold the writer and his fellow Southerners in equal contempt. In historical writing recent Southern authors hold a high place, because they have written as a rule to vindicate the truth rather than to make money. Their books picture a people vastly different from the creatures our mercenary literati have created. It is in Southern newspapers and monthly magazines written for Southern readers that the Southern thought and culture of our day is to be seen in its real character."

Apropos of the approaching naval parade the current number of Harper's Weekly contains several attractive illustrations of naval subjects, including a view of the rendezvous at Hampton Roads, a front page picture by R. F. Zogbaum, naval maneuver scenes, etc. Another prominent feature is an article on the cavalry school at Saumur, France, "A Nursery of French Cavalry," profusely illustrated. The Pope's exhibit at the World's Fair is appropriately noticed, and the "Entrance to the Electrical Building," is the subject of illustration. There are articles, with illustrations on the new Municipal Art society, on the last of the old Dutch houses in Albany, and on several other timely and interesting topics.

Mr. Joel Chandler Harris is keeping up his imaginative work side by side with his newspaper writing. He is engaged upon a novel which is to bear the title of "Aaron" upon a play and upon a series of short stories. It is said that Mr. Harris never talks about his books if he can help it, a reticence which scoffers say is not common among authors.

Marion Harland will contribute to the next number of Harper's Bazar the first of a short series of articles entitled "Common Sense Among the Chickens," containing practical directions and suggestions regarding the care of poultry, with valuable hints on poultry raising for profit.

The literary excursions of Rider Haggard began with the preparation of divers magazine articles on South African subjects. His novel "Dawn" he regards as his first book. He declares that the idea of writing it was given to him by the face of a girl seen by him in a church. He had some difficulty in finding a publisher for this novel and was obliged to rewrite it.

Edna Lyall's new story "To Right the Wrong," the first instalment of which was published in Harper's Bazar for April 8, will be continued in special eight page monthly supplements, the first of which will be given in the number of the Bazar published May 6.

Two more Balzac books, "A Great Man of the Provinces" (the second part of "Lost Illusions") and "The Brotherhood of Consolation" (L'Envers de l'Histoire Contemporaine) have been prepared by Miss Wormeley and are on the list of Roberts Brothers.

Ladies who intend going to the World's Fair this summer will find much information which may be of benefit to them in an article on "The Visiting Women in Chicago," which Laura Dayton Fessenden will contribute to Harper's Bazar for April 22.

Mr. Arthur Sherburne Hardy is about to return to his duties as professor of mathematics at Dartmouth, not however severing his connection with The Cosmopolitan. A large portion of the year he will spend at his desk in the editorial room of that magazine.

The two volumes of Mr. Henry T. Finck's "Life of Wagner" will be brought out within a few days. It will contain various interesting portraits.

THE STORY TELLERS

Richard Harding Davis, Hamlin Garland, Hawthorne, Kipling and Miss Wilkins.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, April [illegible].—Richard Harding Davis has [illegible] recently been brought as near the doors of the French academy as it is possible for one of foreign birth ever to get. One of his short stories having been translated [illegible] French [illegible] The [illegible] Dix [illegible] The [illegible] The R[illegible] of Mr. Davis' short stories which is called "An Unfinished Story." What was published in the United States is [illegible] the popular interest which his story of newspaper life called "Gallagher" created.

Mr. Davis [illegible] where he [illegible] of the magazines [illegible] of Mr. Davis [illegible] Mr. Davis [illegible] than could be [illegible] production of [illegible].

[illegible] club and am [illegible] figures to show [illegible] would bring its [illegible] popular [illegible] Mr. Davis [illegible] Mr. Davis [illegible] all his works [illegible].

Mr. Davis [illegible] says that he hopes to gain [illegible] years of [illegible] back [illegible] first as it is his best [illegible].

Few American writers of fiction have [illegible] The R[illegible] Dux [illegible] and Mrs. [illegible] received notice [illegible] and Bret Harte's earlier short stories and [illegible] of his later [illegible] that magazine. It has a [illegible] of Mark Twain's sketch [illegible] Edgar Allan Poe his European reputation. But of the vast number of American writers of fiction some of whom have been very successful, perhaps not more than a score have been [illegible] by this mighty influence in making European fame.

It was the opinion of James Russell Lowell that some of the finest short stories ever written have been lost and their authors remained unknown since they were published anonymously in the newspapers. He spoke of one particularly which he read in one of the New York papers and saw reprinted afterward in a New England paper, saying that it was a gem of unrecognized genius, and when the friend to whom he spoke of this asked him why he did not bring his own great name to bear so that the story and its author might receive the recognition he thought was due, Mr. Lowell replied: "It is not necessary. If that was not a mere momentary inspiration the author will be heard from again. If it was an unconscious flash and the author's powers were exhausted in the telling of it then recognition would do him no good."

John Boyle O'Reilly used to say that no American had made fame with short stories excepting Bret Harte, and yet he declared that he had read a dozen stories of from 3,000 to [illegible] words which seemed to him fully equal to the best work that Harte had done, but they were published anonymously.

The best of the modern school of short story tellers, at least among men, seem disposed to give it up after a few years employment with this sort of fiction. Thomas Nelson Page for instance has been reading, and has recently been employed to travel through the south and write not fiction but a series of sketches available for newspaper purposes. John Elliott Curran, who gained a brief distinction a few years ago as a short story writer and who was himself delighted when he received one month as much as $20 for his short stories, was nevertheless compelled to take up dramatic criticism and was engaged in that work when he died.

Hamlin Garland, who has attained great popularity in the west as a writer of short stories depicting frontier life, may have a career, although some eastern publishers are inclined to think that his experience will be that of the others. Miss Wilkins, who is perhaps the most popular, certainly the most fortunate in her pecuniary returns, just now is believed to have practically abandoned short story writing and to be ambitious to gain other laurels as a dramatist.

Julian Hawthorne, whose short stories at one time commanded a high price, seems to have given up such literature and is reported to be about to sail for Jamaica to make a study of life upon that island for general newspaper and magazine service.

A New York publisher who recently called upon Rudyard Kipling at his home in Brattleboro brought back word that Kipling had also practically abandoned short story telling, being now intent upon longer works of fiction, also the writing of poetry, and the publisher suspected having also the ambition to produce a great play.

Whittier's Homely Wit.

A homely native wit pointed Whittier's familiar correspondence. Writing in 1849 while revising his volume for publication, he speaks of one of his poems as "that rascally old ballad Kathleen," and adds: "It wants something, though it is already too long." He adds: "The weather this morning is cold enough for an Eskimo's purgatory—terrible. What did the old pilgrims mean by coming here?"

With the years his friendship with his publisher became more intimate. In writing him he often indulged his humor for fun and banter. "Bachelor as I am I congratulate thee on thy escape from single (misery) blessedness. It is the very wisest thing thee ever did. Were I autocrat I would see to it that every young man over [illegible] and every young woman over 20 was married without delay. Perhaps on second thought it might be well to keep one old maid and one old bachelor in each town by way of warning, just as the Spartans did their drunken helots."

Discussing the question of some of his bad rhymes, a [illegible] then he wrote once: "I heartily thank thee for the suggestions. Let me have more of them. I had a hearty laugh at thy [illegible] simply [illegible] otherwise [illegible] fering with [illegible]."—Harper's.

An Anecdote of Tennyson.

Reminiscences of Lowell.

Prof. Charles Eliot Norton gave some interesting reminiscences of James Russell Lowell in an address delivered at Cambridge port the other evening. In 1846 Prof. Norton said, in speaking of the early acquaintance, Lowell was not quite thirty years old and was one of the pleasantest of men—as [illegible] as you could find, born, as some acquaintance of his has said, a bottle of champagne and ahead of every other man with such sparkling wit with such lovely humor which led him into utmost boyishness at times and if you met [illegible] with [illegible] could [illegible] that he [illegible] I think I express it when I say that he was the pleasantest companion you could have.

He never could keep any money in his pocket. [illegible]

Acquiring a Vocabulary.

[illegible] of [illegible] fascinating [illegible] way of acquiring a good vocabulary [illegible] are born of the spoken or the written word.

One way of acquiring a good vocabulary is [illegible] habitually associating with people who speak correctly and whose choice of words is careful and elegant. The [illegible] highly educated and congenial people is in itself a liberal education in this regard.

One sometimes wonders at the singular lapses into slovenly and illiterate blunders conspicuous in men and women who should know better. True, they should and probably do know better, but in daily practice few people rise very much above the ordinary level of those with whom they always converse. A city bred girl went to live in a part of the country where provincialisms are the current coin of daily talk. Returning a few years later to her home, no one would have supposed her to be the same person, so many queer little phrases and downright forms of speech, inelegant and lacking in good form, had she, a very susceptible person, picked up and adopted.

If we wish our daughter to be proficient in music we take her to hear the most renowned artists. Technique may be acquired by constant practice under the best instructors, but she can gain feeling, appreciation of color and phrasing, sincere and genuine culture in music, only by hearing it rendered well, and this is true of both vocal and instrumental performance. So it is true that a good vocabulary is greatly augmented by habitually listening to eloquent and beautiful speech, to the polished diction of the pulpit, to the rounded rhythmic sentences of prayer and praise. The young person who always goes to church will gain something not included in our usual thought of church going—a larger and more facile vocabulary.

For two years, said a student of French, I heard no English that I could help. I attended a French church. I went wherever French was spoken in public and in private. I lived in a French atmosphere.

This is equally true of English. A vocabulary is not gained in a day or week. It is the slow accretion of many days, the development of many weeks.—Harper's Bazar.

ITS CHARA[CTER.] [illegible] The Book of Proverbs belongs to what modern [illegible] call the wisdom literature, including [illegible] Proverbs, Job, Ecclesiastes and Solomon's Song. It approaches things and [illegible] divine from another side than the Prophets or Psalms. It is the philosophy of practical life. It is [illegible] Bible does not [illegible] and discretion [illegible] the most [illegible] telligence and [illegible] education. In her own self she was the most overwhelming refutation of that remark; but then, he reflected, Spicca did not know her well enough, and habitually believed in nothing and in nobody. At least every one supposed that was Spicca's view of the world.

Before long Laura took Pietro to see Arden, and left the two together.

"There is something seriously wrong with me, Ghisleri," said his friend. "I am going to be very ill. I feel it."

It was not like him to speak in that way, for he was brave and generally did his best to hide his sufferings from everyone. Ghisleri looked at him anxiously. His face was drawn and pinched, and there were spots of color on his cheeks which had not been there a few hours earlier.

"Perhaps you have a little fever with the cold," suggested Pietro, in a reassuring tone. "It often happens in this country."

"I dare say," replied Arden. "It may be so. At all events, your specialist was right about the main thing, and I am no more consumptive than you are. But I feel I cannot tell why—that I am going to be very ill indeed. It may be an impression, and even if I am I shall probably weather it."

"Of course you will." But Ghisleri was in reality alarmed.

"I am so glad you came to-day," continued Arden, [speak]ing more rapidly. "If I should [be] worse to-morrow, really ill, you know you must write to my brother. I would not ask my wife to do it for worlds. Do you understand?"

"Perfectly—but I do not believe there will be any [illegible]—"

"Never mind that!" exclaimed Arden, interrupting him almost impatiently. "If there is any [illegible], you will write. I cannot tell you all about it. Of course I may not be delirious, you know, but again, I may be—one is never sure, and then it would be too late. Uncle Herbert is still alive, thank God, and quite well, and if anything should happen to me, his will would be worth nothing. Laura would not get a penny and would be dreadfully poor. Henry must do something for her. Do you understand me? He must. You must see to it, too, or he will never think of it—kind as he is. Those things do not strike him. You see I have only my small portion—which is little enough, as you know, because there are so many sisters and they are not all rich either. We could not go on living in this way long—but Henry was very generous. He sent me two thousand pounds when we were married, and the yacht too, so that we spent very little —"

"You are exhausting yourself, my dear fellow," said Ghisleri, growing more anxious as he listened to the sick man's excited talk. "You have told me all this before, and your brother knows it, too, he will not a[illegible] Lady Herbert —"

"One never can tell what he will do," broke in Arden, raising himself a little on his elbow and facing his friend. His eyes were unnaturally brilliant. "He is so eccentric. And Laura must have money—she must have plenty—not that she was brought up in the Geranos' house, and I should never have thought of marrying her but for Uncle Herbert's money."

"You would both have been perfectly happy on a hundred a year," observed Pietro. "People are when they love each other as you do."

Arden's face softened at once, and Ghisleri saw that he was thinking of how f[illegible] He was silent for a few moments.

"That is all very well," he said, suddenly rousing himself again. "That might do so long as I should be there to make life smooth for her. But when she is left alone—especially here. Ghisleri, I do not like to think that she must live here after I am gone."

"For Heaven's sake, do not begin to talk in that way, Arden! It is perfectly absurd. You only have a cold, after all."

"Perhaps so. I believe I have something worse. Never mind. I was saying that I could not bear to think of her living here without me. It is quite true. No, it is not sentiment—something much more reasonable and real. There are people here who hate us both, who positively hate us, and who will make her life unbearable when there is no one to protect her—the more so if she is poor. And besides, you know what will happen before long—oh, I cannot think of it!"

Ghisleri did not answer at once, for it was not clear to him how Arden had discovered that he had enemies. But the latter waited for no answer, and went on after a few seconds, [illegible]

"You [illegible]," he said, "how [illegible] it is that Henry should [illegible] that you should write to him. [illegible] he should be made to und[erstand] [illegible]

[illegible]

"He [illegible] He did not know [illegible] what [illegible]," he answered. "[illegible] I do not think there is anything."

[illegible] even a very little [illegible] "Of course [illegible] the other [illegible]

"You have told Lady Herbert exactly what [illegible] I suppose. In that case I [illegible]"

The doctor was confirmed in his suspicion that Ghisleri was afraid of catching the fever [illegible] the exceptional nature of [illegible] Pietro wrote a few words [illegible] telling Laura that he would be back before dinner time with the best [nurse to be] found, and sent it up by the porter. Then he drove home as quickly as possible, dressed himself entirely afresh and went to see the Contessa dell' Arno.

"I have come," he said, after the first greeting, "to tell you that you will not see me for several days. Arden has got the scarlet fever and I shall be there taking care of him, more or less, until he is out of danger."

"Can they not have a nurse for him?" asked Maddalena, raising her eyebrows.

"There will be a nurse, too. I am going to get one now and take her there."

"You do not seem anxious to consult me in the least," said the Contessa. "You never do nowadays."

"What do you mean? Do you think it is a case of consulting any one? I do not understand."

"Do you think you have any right to risk your life in this way? Do you think you contribute to my happiness by doing it? And yet I have heard you say that my happiness is first in your thoughts. Not that I ever believed it."

"You are wrong," answered Ghisleri, gently. "I would do almost anything for you."

"What a clever reservation—almost anything. You know that if you did not put it in that way, I should tell you not to go near the Ardens until there is no danger of catching the fever."

"Of course," assented Pietro.

"You ought not to be so diplomatic. You used to talk very differently. Do you remember that evening by the waterfall at Vallombrosa? You have changed since then."

Her classic face began to harden in the way he knew so well.

"There is no question of diplomacy," he said quietly. "Arden has been my friend these ten years and he is in very great danger. I mean to take care of him as long as I am needed, because I do not trust nurses, and because Lady Herbert is anything but strong herself at the present time, and may break down, or lose her head. As for risking my life, there is no risk at all in the matter. I have very little belief in contagion, though the doctors talk about it."

"I suppose you have just seen him," observed the Contessa, who was determined to find fault. "You do not seem to ask yourself whether [illegible]"

[illegible]

"[illegible] That sort of thing cannot be [illegible]"

[illegible]

She spoke bitterly, though she was conscious that the right was not all on her side, and that Ghisleri, as he said, could defend the Ardens without fear of adverse criticism, whereas it would be a very different matter if he entered the lists in her defense.

"You are not quite just to me, my dear lady," he said, after a moment's reflection. "You are not the wife of my old friend, and an otherwise indifferent person."

"Quite indifferent?" she looked keenly at him.

"Quite," he answered with perfect sincerity. "A person is indifferent whom one neither loves nor calls an intimate friend. Yet Lady Herbert is beautiful and good, and is admirable in many ways. But the world knows that I am no more in love with her than with Donna Adele, and I am quite free, therefore, to defend her."

"Of course you are. The only thing that"

CHAPTER X.

[illegible] what the Contessa had said, and [illegible], after a day or two, she would probably relent. Nor did the scarlet fever seem a very great evil. People were ill all the year round, were taken care of by the members of their own family and by nurses, and recovered or died, as the case might be. He had no especial knowledge to help him in watching over Herbert Arden, though he believed himself quiet and skilful in a sick room, and had more than once done what he could in such cases. He felt, indeed, that he was more deeply attached to the man than he had supposed himself to be, but he had not imagined that at the critical moment that attachment would outweigh all consideration for Maddalena dell' Arno. And yet he was not only clinging to the belief that he loved her, but was conscious that there was a broad foundation of truth for that belief to rest upon. He asked himself in vain why he was at that moment going from her house to Arden's, and he found no answer. That Laura herself contributed in any way to strengthen his resolve was too monstrous to be believed, even by himself, against himself. He was not so bad as that yet. He laughed bitterly at his inability to comprehend his own motives and impulses, as he drove to the little convent of the French Sisters of the "Bon Secours" to ask for the best nurse they could give him. It was strange, too, that he should be coming directly from Maddalena's side to the habitation of a community of almost saintly women—stranger still, that he should be on his way to a house where, during the next few days, he expected to spend his time in the society of a woman who ranked even higher than they in his exalted estimate of her character.

He got the nurse, and she was dispatched in the company of another sister in a separate cab, while Ghisleri followed in his own. When they reached the house they found that Arden was much worse. His mind was wandering, and, though he constantly called for Laura, he did not know her when she came to his side, trying to keep back the scalding tears lest they should fall on him as she bent down to catch his words. The doctor had been sent for a third time in great haste. Meanwhile, the sister went about her duties silently and systematically, making herself thoroughly familiar with the arrangements of the room, and preparing all that could be needed during the night, so far as she could foresee the doctor's possible instructions. She smoothed Arden's pillows with a hand, the practiced perfection of whose touch told a wonderful tale of lifelong labor among the sick.

"Madame should not be here," she said to Ghisleri, in a quiet, even voice. "It may soon be contagious."

Laura heard the words as she stood on the other side of the bed, watching every passing expression on Arden's flushed face.

"I will not leave him," she said, simply.

The sister did not answer. She had done her duty in giving the warning, and she could do no more. When she had finished all her arrangements she sat down, accustomed to husband her strength always against the strain that must inevitably fall upon it day by day. She took out her small black book and began to read, glancing at Arden at regular intervals of about a minute.

Ghisleri entreated Laura to take some rest, or at least to follow the sister's example and sit down, since nothing could be done. She did not seem to understand. He was glad he had come, for he fancied she was losing her head [illegible]. He stood beside her [illegible] waiting for the doctor, who appeared before long.

"It is one of the most extraordinarily virulent cases I ever knew," he said to Ghisleri when the two were alone together in the drawing room, for Laura would not leave her husband's side for a moment. "I hardly know what to make of it, though of course there can be no doubt as to what it is. It is better that you should know how serious the case is. I presume you are an intimate friend of Lord Herbert Arden's?"

"Yes, an old friend."

"And you are not afraid of catching the fever?" asked the doctor.

"Not in the least."

"Oh, I thought from a question you asked [illegible]" He hesitated.

"I was going to see a friend, and I wanted to be on the safe side," said Ghisleri.

"I am glad of that, it is just as well that there should be a man at hand. Shall you spend the night here?"

"Yes," replied Ghisleri.

"Very good. I have told the sister to send for me if the temperature rises more than two tenths of a degree centigrade higher than it is now. It ought to go down. If I am called anywhere I will leave the address at my lodgings, where one of my servants will sit up all night. I confess that I am surprised by the case. In Rome the scarlet fever is rarely so dangerous."

Thereupon the doctor took his leave, and Ghisleri remained alone in the drawing-room. He sat down and took up a book. For the present it seemed best not to go back to Arden's room. His constant presence might be disagreeable to Laura, since she could not be induced to leave her husband as yet. Ghisleri's turn would come when she was exhausted, or when he had an opportunity of persuading her to take some rest. Until then there was nothing to be done but to wait. A servant came in and put wood on the fire and turned down a lamp that was smoking a little. He inquired of Ghisleri whether her ladyship would wish any dinner served, and Pietro told him to keep something in readiness in case she should be hungry. He himself rarely had much appetite, and to-night he had none at all. He tried to read, without much success, for his own thoughts crowded upon each other so quickly and tumultuously that he found it impossible to concentrate his attention.

The clocks [illegible] half past [illegible]

[illegible]

Ghisleri knew [it] very improbable [illegible] fortunate circumstance was at the outset of such a severe illness, but he said nothing about it. Any [thing] which would give Laura hope was good in itself. She sank into a deep chair by the fire and watched the flames, her chin resting on her hand. She seemed almost unconscious of Ghisleri's presence as he stood leaning against the mantelpiece and looking down at her.

"I will go and see how he is," he said at last, and went toward the door. Just as he touched the handle she called him, an odd tone, as though she was startled by something.

"Signor Ghisleri! Please come back."

He obeyed, and resumed his former attitude.

"I am very nervous," she said, with a little shiver. "Please do not leave me—I—I am afraid to be alone. If you wish to go we will go together."

Ghisleri concealed his surprise, which was considerable. The wish she expressed was very foreign to her usually quiet and collected nature. He saw that her nerves were rudely shaken.

"It is very weak of me!" she said presently in an apologetic tone. "But I see his face all the time, and I hear that dreadful wandering talk—I cannot bear it."

"I do not wonder," answered Pietro, quietly. "You must be very tired, too. Will you not lie down on the sofa, while I sit here and wait? It would be so much better. You will need your strength to-morrow."

"That is true," she said, as though struck by the truth of the last words.

She crossed the room and lay down upon a large sofa at a little distance from the fire, arranged the folds of her dress with that modest, womanly dignity some women have in their smallest actions, clasped her hands and closed her eyes. Pietro sat down and looked at her, musing over the strange combination of circumstances which formed themselves in his life. It seemed odd that he should be where he was, toward the small hours of the morning, watching over one of the women he admired most in the world, keeping his place at her especial request, when he had in reality come to help in taking care of her husband. How the world would wag its head and talk, he thought, if it could guess where he was!

For a long time Laura did not move, and he was sure that she was still awake. Then all at once he saw her hands relax and loosen from each other, her head turned a little on the dark velvet cushion, and she sighed as she sunk to sleep. She was left quiet after that. Her lips moved, and she stirred uneasily from time to time, evidently dreaming over again the painful scenes of the evening. Ghisleri rang the bell, crossed the room swiftly, and opened the door without noise. Donald appeared in the hall outside.

"Her ladyship has fallen asleep on the sofa," said Pietro. "She does not wish to be left alone. Is there any woman servant awake in the house?"

"No, sir. Her ladyship sent her maid to bed."

"Never mind. Go and sit quietly in the drawing-room in case she should need anything, while I go and see how Lord Herbert is."

"Very good, sir."

The world would have been even more surprised now than before, especially if it could have understood the meaning of what Ghisleri did, and the refined reverence implied in his unwillingness to remain in the drawing-room longer than [necessary]. It would not have believed in his motive, and it would have added that he was very foolish not to enjoy the artistic pleasure of watching over the beautiful woman in her sleep as long as he could, more especially as she had gone to the length of asking him to do so. But Ghisleri thought very differently.

He entered the sick room and sat down by the bedside. Arden was in a restless state between waking and unconsciousness, moaning aloud without articulating any words, his face flushed to a deep purple hue, his eyes half open and turned up under the lids, so that only the white was visible. The sister was seated by the table, on which stood a small lamp, the light being screened from Arden by a makeshift consisting of the cover of a bandbox supported by a few heavy books. When Ghisleri had entered she had glanced at him, and explained by a sign that there was no change. Neither he nor she thought of speaking during the hour that followed. The sister had a watch before her on the table, and at regular intervals she rose, poured a spoonful of something into Arden's mouth, smoothed his pillow, saw that he was as comfortable as he could be, and went back to her seat. At the end of the hour she took Arden's temperature with the fever thermometer, and wrote down the result on a sheet of paper. It had fallen one tenth of a degree since midnight.

"It generally does toward morning," said the sister in a low voice, in answer to Ghisleri's inquiry as to whether this was a really favorable symptom of a change for the better.

The night passed wearily. Pietro felt that he was of little use, unless his presence in the house afforded Laura some sort of moral support, so far as the nursing was concerned, the sister neither needed nor expected any assistance. Toward 5 o'clock, Laura entered the room. On waking from her sleep, she had seen Donald seated in Ghisleri's place, and had wondered why the latter had gone away.

"He seems better," she whispered, bending over her husband, and softly smoothing the thick brown hair from his forehead.

"The temperature has fallen," answered Ghisleri, giving her the only encouragement he could.

"Thank God!" Laura sat down by the opposite side of the bed. Presently, by a sign, she asked Ghisleri whether he would not go home.

"I will wait in the drawing room until the doctor comes and the other sister has arrived for the day," he said, coming to her side.

She merely nodded, and he quietly went out. Before long Donald brought him some coffee, and he sat where he had sat in the early part of the night, anxiously awaiting the doctor's coming.

There was little enough to be learned when the latter actually came. A very bad case, he said, so bad that he would not be averse to asking the opinion of a colleague, and later the same colleague came, saw Arden, shook his head and said that it was the worst case he had ever seen, but that the treatment so far was perfectly correct.

There was nothing to be done, but to take the best care possible of the patient. Ghisleri had no hope whatever, and Laura became almost totally silent. She could not be paler than she was, but Pietro almost fancied that she was growing hourly thinner, while the [illegible] eyes [illegible] to sink [illegible] deeper beneath the marble brow. He went home for a few hours to d[illegible] and returned at midday. The l[illegible] of one night's rest had not even told upon his face, but his expression was grave and [illegible] in the extreme, and his manner even more than usually quiet. Laura had not slept again [illegible] the drawing [illegible] looked [illegible] Ghisleri thought it [was] time to [illegible] say to her.

"My dear Lady Herbert," he said, "forgive me for being quite frank. This is not a time for [illegible] phrases. You must positively rest, or you will break down and you [illegible] yourself."

[illegible]," she said.

"Your nerves keep you up. I entreat you to think of what I say, and I must say it. You may risk your own life, if you please; it is natural that you should run at least the risk of catching it, but you have no right to [illegible]"

[illegible]

"[illegible]," he said gravely as he took his leave [illegible]. "I have [illegible] hope of his recovery, and I [illegible]"

It was no surprise to Ghisleri, who knew how little strength of resistance lay in the crippled frame. He bent his head in silence as the physician went out and he almost shivered as he thought of what was before him. He knew now that he must stand by Laura's side at the last moment of great suffering, when she was to see the one thing she loved pass away before her eyes. He was more than ever glad that he had induced her to rest. Arden's mind was still wandering, and she could be of no immediate use.

So the day ended at last and the night began and wore on, much like the previous one, saving that the anxiety of all was trebled. The other sister had returned, and Ghisleri saw by her face that she had no hope. With the same faultless regularity she performed her duties through the long hours.

Toward midnight Laura and Ghisleri met in the drawing room. For several minutes she stood in silence before the fire. Pietro could see that her lips were trembling as though she were on the point of bursting into tears. He knew how proud she must be, and he moved away toward the door. She heard his step behind her, and without turning round she beckoned to him with her hand to stay. He came back and stood at a little distance from her. Still she was silent for a moment; then she spoke.

"It is coming," she said unsteadily. "You must help me to bear it."

"I will do my best," answered Ghisleri, earnestly.

Another pause followed. Then again she made a gesture, hurried and almost violent, bidding him to leave her. Before he could reach the door he heard her first sob, and as he closed it behind him the storm of her passionate grief broke upon the silence of the night. He was not a man easily moved to any outward demonstration of feeling, but the tears stood in his eyes as he went back to Arden's bedside, and they were not for the friend he was so soon to lose.

The sick man was unconscious and lay quite still on his back with closed lids. The sister was on her feet watching him intently. She shook her head sadly when Ghisleri looked at her. The end was not far off, as she in her great experience well knew. In hot haste Pietro sent for the doctor, with a message saying that Lord Herbert was dying. But when he arrived he admitted reluctantly that he could do nothing; there was no hope even of prolonging life until morning.

"Lady Herbert should be told the truth," he said. "If you wish it I will wait in another room until the end."

"I think it would be better. Lady Herbert knows that there is no hope but she will feel less nervous if you are at hand. How long do you expect [illegible]"

"He will not live many minutes after he comes to himself, I should say. The little strength there was is all gone. There will be a lucid interval of a few moments, and then the heart will stop. It was always defective."

"Then Lady Herbert ought to be with him now in case he comes," said Ghisleri.

He left the doctor in the little room which Arden had used as a study, and went back to the drawing-room, feeling that one of the hardest moments of his life had come. Laura was seated in a deep chair, leaning back, her eyes half closed and her cheeks still wet with tears. She started as Ghisleri entered.

"The doctor has seen him again," he said. "If you are able it would be better —" He stopped, for he saw that she understood.

They went back together. As they entered the room they heard Arden's weak voice.

"Laura, darling, where are you?" he was saying. Ghisleri saw that he was quite in possession of his faculties, and went quietly out, leaving him with his wife and the sister.

"I am here, love," Laura answered, coming swiftly up to his side and supporting him as he tried to sit up.

"It was so long," he said faintly. "I am so glad you have come, dear."

"You must not try to talk. You must not tire yourself."

"It makes no difference now," he answered, letting her head [rest] upon his shoulder. "I must speak, dear one, this once before I die. Yes, I know I am dying. It is better so. I have had in you all that God has to give, all the happiness of a long life in these short months."

He paused and drew a painful breath. Laura's face was like alabaster, but she did not break down again now until all was over.

"I owe it all to you—my life's love. You have given me so much, and I have given you so little. But God will give it all back to you, dear, some day. There is one thing I must say—oh, my breath!"

He gasped in an agonized way, and almost choked. Laura thought it was the end, but he rallied again presently.

"One thing, darling—you must remember, if you have loved me—oh, and you have, dear—that no promise binds you. You must try and think that if you forego any happiness for the memory of me, you will be taking that same happiness from me as well as from yourself. It will be right and just that you should marry if you wish to."

"Oh, Herbert! Herbert!" cried Laura, pressing him to her, "do not talk so!"

"Promise me that you will never think yourself bound," he said earnestly, speaking with more and more effort. "I shall not die happy unless you do."

Laura bowed her head.

"I promise it, dear, because you wish it."

"Thank you, love."

He was silent for some time. He seemed to be thinking, or at least trying to collect his last thoughts.

"If it is a little girl, call her Laura," he said, in a breaking voice. "Then I shall know her in heaven, if she comes to me before you."

"Or else Herbert," said Laura, softly.

He moved his head a little in [illegible].

"Darling," he said presently, "always remember that my last breath is a blessing for you."

Very tenderly she pressed him to her heart and kissed him. Not till long afterward did she realize the perfect unselfishness of the man's end, nor how every word so painfully spoken was meant to forestall and soothe her coming sorrow.

"Say a prayer for me, darling—it is not far off. Say something in your own words—they will be better heard."

Still supporting him against her breast, Laura raised her eyes heavenward. The sister, little used to seeing men die without comfort of Holy Church, knelt down by the table. Then Laura's soft voice was heard in the quiet chamber.

"Almighty God, I beseech thee to receive the soul of this pure and true hearted man amongst the spirits of those that are with thee, to forgive all his sins if any are yet unforgiven, and to render to him in heavenly joy all the happiness he has brought her who loves him on earth, through our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen."

She [illegible] forcing back the tears. He moved his head a little, and [illegible] the hand that supported him. A long silence followed.

"I thought Ghisleri [illegible] to the door with you and went out again," he said very faintly.

"Would you like to [see] him, dear?"

"Yes. He is a true friend [illegible] in every way [illegible]"

[illegible]

"Love—love—love —"

The light went out in his eyes, and Herbert Arden was dead, dying, as he had lived of late, and perhaps all his life, unselfish in every thought and deed.

With a cry that seemed to break her heart, Laura fell forward upon the shadowy form that seemed so unnaturally small as it lay there under the white coverlet. Ghisleri knelt in silence a few minutes beside his dead friend, and then rose to his feet.

"She has fainted," said the sister softly. "If you could lift her with care."

[illegible] needed no help as he lifted the unconscious woman in his arms and carried her swiftly from the room. He laid her upon the very sofa on which he had seen her [illegible] upon the previous night, and rang for Donald, as he had then done.

"Her ladyship [illegible]," [illegible] in a low voice, as the Scotchman entered. "Her ladyship has fainted. Please send for her maid."

Donald turned very white and left the room without a word. When Laura came to herself the women were with her and the sister was gone. [illegible] Then he went back to the chamber of death. No stranger's unloving hands should touch the frail body of the man he had known so well. Pietro Ghisleri, who, as the world said, "never cared," was oddly sensitive at times. On that [illegible] night he would let no one help him in performing the last office for Herbert Arden. When Laura next saw her husband, the calm and beautiful face lay on its snowy pillow surrounded with masses of white flowers. That was at daybreak.

[illegible] the following night Ghisleri followed [illegible] down [illegible] stairs. [illegible] She came to take care of Herbert Arden's son.

[illegible] Candidates For 1896. Poker or Pinochle. Harrison, Allison or Reed. A Bit of Inside History.

[illegible]

Is to the [illegible] of the secretary of state [illegible] him. It is [illegible] sticks [illegible] higher rank [illegible] to speak [illegible] with Mr [illegible] strained and unnatural about that title, particularly before [illegible] it. But it is [illegible] and familiar conversation [illegible] titles of some of the [illegible] cabinet. Think of the awkwardness of having to say [illegible] Mr Attorney General [illegible] Every man who takes [illegible] should be [illegible] good American [illegible] eral or [illegible] be relieved of the necessity of addressing him in the manner required by official etiquette.

Gresham and Cleveland are getting along famously together. They have many things in common. Both are plain blunt men. Neither has learning enough or polish enough to annoy the other. Both are fond of good stories and gossip and fishing. I predict that before the summer is over they will be off to the Adirondacks or to Lake Erie fishing together. Mr Cleveland is in love with the Adirondacks. Mr Gresham is fond of Put in Bay. The odds are that Cleveland's preference will prevail and that this pair of big men will go to the Adirondacks to loaf and fish and invite their souls. I don't believe Mr Cleveland plays Judge Gresham's favorite game, which is poker for disgustingly small stakes. Therefore they are not likely to indulge in that great American game. But the judge is adaptable and fond of all games of cards, and he may have to [illegible] pinochle.

Noticing that the president and his secretary of state are becoming chums the gossips will have it that Gresham is to be Cleveland's heir as leader of the Democratic party and nominee of Democracy for the presidency in the year 1896. One of the peculiarities of American politics is that we no sooner win one fight in the party field and place a man in the presidential chair than we begin talking about the next battle and scheming for the succession. It is my opinion and I have some opportunities for knowing the facts, that neither the president nor his secretary of state has as yet given a thought to the political campaign of 1896. They are altogether too busy with the affairs of the present to bother themselves about the future.

One thing is certain, however, and this is that Mr Gresham is fast becoming one of the most popular men in the Democratic party. The same manners which fascinated Cleveland are fascinating a good many other Democrats. When he was first appointed the old line Democrats were very much displeased. As a prominent Democrat said to me the other day, "You could see the spinal column of the party writhe while it was in the act of swallowing Gresham." But it accomplished the feat and now that the process is complete the effect is not uncomfortable after all. We are such an adaptable people in our politics, as in everything else, that a revolution of this sort gives but a few and early qualms and then quickly settles into the natural order of things. Gresham is not only making many friends among the big Democrats but I notice that he too is beginning to feel at home in his new surroundings, for he often speaks of "our party," meaning thereby the Democracy.

REED OF NEW YORK.

It may surprise [illegible] that there are several candidates for the presidential nomination of [illegible] already at work in Washington. [illegible] always was first handed and these ambitious gentlemen while [illegible] very much now are shaping their policies and eagerly watching the movements of their rivals. On the Republican side there are two avowed candidates for the nomination. One of these is Senator Allison and the other is ex-Speaker Reed. In the opinion of a great many Republicans Allison [illegible] the coming man. He has had a great career. He has made no mistakes. He is acceptable to all wings of the party. He is a charming man who makes friends easily and naturally and who has few or no enemies. As for Thomas B Reed he is [illegible] Washington. [illegible] ing as Allison [illegible] within his own party. But he [illegible] force and is looking [illegible] as a great [illegible] ership and with great possibilities before him.

Ex-President Harrison [illegible] probably will be an aspirant for the [illegible] but the opinion of the best observers here is that he will ask in vain. It falls to the lot of but one man in a century to lead [illegible] president to suffer defeat [illegible] appear as a successful [illegible] probable that the [illegible] our day [illegible] the natural [illegible] a formulation [illegible] Whether [illegible] enters the lists [illegible] friends will [illegible] and Allison. Between Harrison [illegible] a good deal of [illegible] Harrison and Allison [illegible] term and have [illegible] ator declined the [illegible] treasury which [illegible] Harrison offered him.

There are plenty of people here who believe that Mr Cleveland [illegible] term. I don't believe it. In fact, I have very good reasons for believing that Mr Cleveland would feel insulted if any one were to suggest to him that he may be an aspirant again for the presidency. He is not acting at all like a man who had further ambition. He acts on the contrary like one who realizes the end of his official career is fixed and who is determined to play now for history and not for any immediate popularity. It is absurd to talk of a third term for Cleveland. The failure of Grant [illegible] the third term business once for all in this country. The strong tendency of the times is toward a limitation of the presidential term [illegible] rather than an extension of it.

[illegible]

However [illegible]

[illegible] Morrison [illegible] Cleveland [illegible] Morrison [illegible] on this occasion as he [illegible] the what [illegible] stay.

BRICE OF OHIO.

though he has no great love for the bluff simple Illinoisan. It was like adding insult to injury when Cleveland refused to take Morrison into his cabinet, though hard pressed to do so and then went to Morrison's own state and took for secretary of state a man who had not hitherto been identified with the Democratic party. Still Morrison is a powerful man. He has scores of influential friends who stand loyally behind him. His time may yet come, though I doubt it.

Senator Hill is still an aspirant for the presidency. Like Gorman he hopes to profit by the mistakes of the president. He is endeavoring to maintain his leadership of the party in New York as a nucleus of his raid on the presidency three years hence. The most interesting phase of politics which we are now concerned with is Cleveland's determination to destroy Hill's influence in New York. That the president intends to reduce Hill to a fourth rate man and to dethrone him in the Empire State I have not the slightest doubt. And the odds are all on his side. Already Tammany Hall has virtually left Hill. There are signs of wavering all along the line of the old guard. If Mr Cleveland lives and keeps his health I do not think Mr Hill will be a formidable candidate for the presidency in 1896.

When Mr Carlisle was appointed secretary of the treasury the gossips had it that he would be Cleveland's successor. They even said there was an understanding that Mr Carlisle should be the heir at law of the administration. Of course that was purely imaginary and it is very improbable that Mr Carlisle will be considered presidential timber at all. He is not of that temperament. He is not a positive force. Already the cares and trials of executive office are wearing him out. The presidency would kill him and I don't believe he would turn his hand over to get it.

BASEBALL SEASON.

SURPRISING RESULTS OF THE PRELIMINARY CAMPAIGN

News In the Camp of Ryan—Wage. Southern Blood. Efforts to Reorganize the Western League. The Severe Spell of Weather In Hades.

DOWN in the sunny south the baseball championship season [illegible] August. Theatre [illegible] of the National League [illegible] that seem [illegible] rather surprising results of the [illegible] these [illegible] in the [illegible] the quintessence of baseball playing ability.

So far no fact has been [illegible] Atlanta seems to be the [illegible] of the baseball [illegible] One of the Atlanta newspapers recently devoted a page to subjects pertaining to the national [illegible] Right [illegible] an order [illegible] the Atlanta [illegible] this [illegible] in time to see the big [illegible] disorganize their cases in their last contests of the day.

Thus we have [illegible] the fact that baseball is most certainly the national game inasmuch as the customs of education give way to its universal pleasures.

Since Captain Adrian Cesar Anson has put in a brief preliminary practice campaign with his team in the Southern league territory he has laid no further claim to the National league championship. The treatment his team received down there somewhat jarred his Chicago nerve. He doesn't feel much like claiming anything—not even that he is alive. "Anse" never had such a troublesome experience while preparing for a championship fight. Those southern teams chased his colts all over the field until their tongues protruded and their faces wore a hunted look. The only comfort the "old man" can get out of it all is to quote the old adage that a bad beginning makes a good ending. If there be truth in that saw the Chicagos ought to win the championship under a stiff pull.

There is consolation for Anson, however, in the knowledge that every National league team which went south was more or less severely handled. There is no doubt whatever that this result was a surprise to the northern players as well as to their friends. And yet I do not regard the results of these practice games as a correct measurement of the relative strength of National and Southern league teams. In every National league team there is a large percent of veteran players who can never be induced to work hard in practice games. They stand in constant dread of strains and other accidents and therefore nurse themselves as tenderly as a mother handles her beloved first born.

On the other hand the southern teams are made up of young players whose practice playing is always daring and desperate. They are anxious to please their manager from the start knowing in many instances that an early good impression may mean a guarantee of a place on the permanent team. Then again these minor league teams would rather beat a National league team than any one of their own number.

Among the recent [illegible] against the baseball [illegible] was [illegible] Learned Ryan of Chicago. Mr Ryan after the disintegration of the Brotherhood dream signed a three years contract with the Chicago club, in which it was stipulated that he should receive as compensation a certain sum annually. The contract, however, like all baseball contracts, contained the ten days notice of release clause. When the Chicago club began to arrange for its team for 1893, Ryan's contract had one year more to run and he refused to take the antifat salary medicine as defiantly as a small boy refuses his first dose of castor oil. But they held Jimmy's nose and he was compelled to swallow the nauseating stuff. The result was self acting. Jimmy is now keeping step with the rest of the boys to the music of "I Got It Where the Chicken Got the Ax."

There is a moral to Ryan's experience, namely a ball player who signs his name to a contract which is supposed to cover more than one season writes himself down thereby an asinine whose ears are longer than his foresight and brains smaller than a pinch of snuff. By signing such a contract he gives a club the right to hold him to that salary for a stipulated length of time yet consents to be let down hard at any time the club may see fit to drop him.

An effort is being made to reorganize the Western league. Kansas City is the center of the agitation. As the buds swell and the birds begin to chirp that enterprising western city begins to realize that it is in danger of being without baseball amusement for the summer. And when Kansas City thinks right hard and realizes what that means it begins to look around and howl for a club and a membership in some league.

The first guess at the order in which the National league clubs will end the season has just been made by the New York Press. It should surprise no one to learn that the New York club heads the list with the Bostons second and the Clevelands third.

There is indirect evidence of a very late and severe spell of winter weather in Hades. Some time in March Long Neal Duffy and McCarthy of the Bostons met and solemnly declared that they would not sign any contracts till the above named tropical lake froze over. Two weeks later the two pledgers [illegible] signed without [illegible] that their [illegible] is always severe [illegible]

STUDENT SLOSSON RETIRES

The Great Billiardist Will No Longer Play Publicly

With George F. Slosson in retirement and Jacob Schaefer crippled with a recent fall, billiards seems to be in a bad way in America. The stagnant condition of affairs was well illustrated a few days ago when it was announced that Anson [illegible] offer [illegible] in cash prizes for a grand international bil[liard] tournament had finally lost, with drawn honors, the American and foreign players, he had refused to compete. By the retirement of Slosson America loses one of its great billiardists. He is now [illegible] and has been prominent in the world of billiards for over 20 years.

Slosson played his first public match in Springfield, Mass, in 1870, when he was a lad of 16, and was [illegible] by B F Dowd [illegible] champion of Massachusetts. His first notable victory occurred at Indianapolis in October 1878, when he defeated Wizard Jacob Schaefer. This victory and others soon placed Slosson in the first rank and today Slosson, Schaefer and their [illegible] rival champion Frank Ives [illegible] great billiards trio of America. In the course of his long career he has defeated Ives, William Sexton, Maurice Vignaux, Maurice Daly, Joseph Dion and Albert Garnier.

NOVELTIES FOR FISHERMEN

The Expanding Hook and Other New Piscatorial Devices.

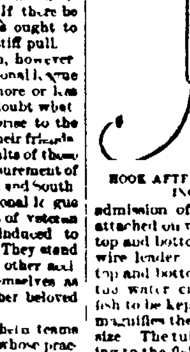

Spring is coming and this [illegible] Izaak Walton [illegible] fascination [illegible] fisherman begins to [illegible] repairs [illegible] else. This year he will find three worthy of attention. One of these is an expanding hook made of fine temper [illegible] the hook proper being [illegible] for [illegible] a single [illegible] This hook [illegible] lower [illegible] the hooks [illegible] per a metallic sheath ending in a gimp or gut leader. When the bait is affixed the hooks of the hooks are pushed up into the sheath and so drawn into the water. When the bait is taken and the fish struck the jerk on the line draws the sheath up the hook shank and lets the double hook expand like an inverted letter V. With the single hook [illegible] takes the place of the second hook. If this hook once gets into a fish's mouth it is very certain to remain there.

HOOK BEFORE EXPANDING.

The second novelty is an automatic float into the lower end of the quill is carried of which is introduced a tiny bent piece of metal [illegible] a small clamp [illegible] line [illegible] the float may be securely attached at a desired position on the line. In reeling up the instant the tip of the fishpole touches the top of the float the clamp is automatically released and so enables the fisherman to give all his attention to the fish he is playing or landing.

The third novelty is for deep water fishermen who find a difficulty in keeping the bait alive for any length of time. The new device is an annealed flint glass tube fitted with a screw [illegible] which can be taken off for the admission of a tiny fish. The hooks are attached on white wire leaders at the glass, top and bottom, and to the line by a white wire leader. There is a small hole at the top and bottom of the tube through which the water circulates freely, enabling the fish to be kept alive all day while the glass magnifies the tiny fry to a very respectable size. The tubes are in various sizes, according to the fish desired to be caught.

HOOK AFTER EXPANDING.

There is also an improvement in bait boxes, a metal box, curved to fit the hip or waist, in a leather case with an adjustable loop for attaching to a belt.

WILL P POND

A SENSATIONAL DIVE.

Straight Downward Ninety-five Feet Into a Shallow Water Tank.

Thomas Burns wears garments consisting principally of medals of silver and gold he has won in swimming and diving contests. He has saved 32 lives during his short career, for he is now but 36 years of age. He has frequently dived from bridges over 100 feet high into rivers but his dive at the famous aquarium in London is a very different affair. He stands on a tiny platform suspended among the iron girders of the roof 95 feet above the floor and sees below him instead of a broad deep river a mass of flaring bewildering lights, rows of upturned faces, and in the wooden floor of the stage what seems from that height to be a mere slot, the tank which he must surely land in. The tank is 18 feet long, 8 feet wide and 7 feet deep. The diver actually dives, takes a header and does not drop feet foremost after the manner of the bridge jumpers. The marvelous precision required to land in the tank is easily appreciable as is also the fate that would befall him should he miss his mark.

Burns is hoisted up to his aerial perch by means of a rope and pulley. Then he simply topples off the platform and those who have strong nerves see his body descend through space like a shot. He seems at first as though he were going to strike the water dead straight. But this is precisely what he does not do. For when he strikes the water it is with his shoulders exactly as the diving acrobat strikes the net. The effect is almost as though he had fallen flat on his back, for the rest of his body comes smack down on the water as soon as his shoulders meet the resistance of the surface. In an instant he is at the surface again puffing and blowing and looking as though the fall and the smash on the water had knocked all the wind out of him. It isn't a dive at all the spectators complain; he falls on his back. There is a popular feeling that in selecting any other way to fall but the way in which he would inevitably kill himself Mr Burns takes quite a mean advantage of the gathering.

Chess Expert Walbrodt.

Carl August Walbrodt, the young German chess expert who is now attracting about as much attention in this country as his more famous rival Emanuel Lasker, is only 21 years of age, but there are few men in the world who can wrestle at the intricate game of chess. Walbrodt is a native of Amsterdam, and as chess players like poets, are born and not made, the young [Walbrodt] began to play his natural talent for chess at a very tender age. When only 15 years old Walbrodt could play a very creditable game and a year or two later he was looked upon as a candidate for future glory among the masters of the game. In 1890 he made his debut as a public player of note in Berlin and won first prize in the Berlin tournament of that year. In 1891 he defeated Schallop and other players of note [illegible] In appearance Walbrodt is a pale and [illegible] He is almost [illegible] king and his head is the only large thing about him.

CARL A. WALBRODT.

Professor Hornaday the naturalist estimated the number of buffalo running wild at the beginning of the year 1890 at 1,000 and this is certainly a liberal estimate.

Female fish of all species are considerably more numerous than males, with two single exceptions, the angler and the catfish.

DR. F. L. OSWALD ON THE COURT OF JUDGE LYNCH

Mob Justice as a Tribunal of Last Appeal. The Santa Hermandad—Vehmic Courts. Origin of the Mafia. Judge Lynch In the United States.

recognizes no higher [illegible] Human beings enjoy [illegible] reason and the advantages [illegible] tion will not put up with injustice as long as they can [illegible] of their own [illegible] act that tender [illegible] the plan [illegible] rocco who hunts political [illegible] like wild beasts and [illegible] devote all their energies [illegible] of survival leaves them no [illegible] terfere with his peculiar system of administration.

But the first breathing spell of such outlaws results in conspira[cies] [illegible] ther the ingenuity of Egyptian priest kings nor the truculence of [illegible] deepots could prevent [illegible] the abuse of this power. [illegible] order of Spain was subverted by the terror of the Moorish [illegible] castles sprang up like fungi on the hills of the peninsula, and the plunder stored behind their thick walls enabled their proprietors to revel in luxury while industrious mechanics had to eat bread of sobras—the sweepings of the flour mills—and in many cases had to sell their half grown children to save their infants from starvation.

The ramparts of the robber strongholds defied the wrath of the king. [illegible] their booty purchased the connivance of the Moors and biased the decision of the courts. But the verdict of the vox populi could not be thus silenced, and in 1253 a troop of Aragon hidalgos returning from a successful surprise of a merchant convoy were in their turn surprised to see 28 of their colleagues dangling from a crosstree. A new power had appeared on the political stage of the peninsula. The Santa Hermandad, which for a twelve [illegible] had gathered and organized its forces in absolute secrecy, had celebrated its second birthday by a memorable assertion of its power, and henceforth highway robbery ceased to rank with what are life insurance companies term medium safe employments.

The Vehmic courts of northern Germany, too, made feudal despots tremble in their strongholds and about the middle of the fourteenth century had extended their influence all over central Europe till even princes hesitated to defy the summons of the Frie Graf, the dread grand master of the secret brotherhood.

For thoroughness of organization and success the Vehmic courts form a phenomenon unparalleled in the history of the human race unless we shall except the portent of the French revolution when a whole nation upheaved its upper strata in a desperate appeal to the arbitrament of fundamental facts.

In its struggle against the representatives of the government that remarkable organization at last became identified with the principle of lawlessness, but owed its first success undoubtedly to its crusade against official tyrants and semiofficial oppressors of the poor.

In our own country the name of "lynch law" has been applied to three widely different modes of deviation from the regular forms of justice. On the frontier settled frontiers [illegible] pioneers merely anticipated the establishment of less informal [illegible] always more impartial [illegible] their extemporate committees [illegible] fear proof and the [illegible] fogging chicanery was equaled [illegible] their contempt [illegible] during that memorable [illegible] of the California Regulators [illegible] Vigilantes, as their Spanish [illegible] called them when [illegible] of the principal orators engaged in a friendly boxing match to settle the question of precedence.
